TERRORIST LAW PUSHED

Italians Demand Moro Revenge

Times News Services

ROME — Italy's parliament, shocked but united by a national outcry to avenge Aldo Moro's murder, was called into session today to back a tough new anti-terrorist law aimed at Moro's Red Brigades kidnappers.

Across the country, workers held "anti-terrorist vigils" through the night in factories and Roman Catholics flocked to churches around the country as shocked, bitter and saddened Italians mourned Moro's death.

But violence continued in Rome, when a terrorist "hit" squad of three men and a woman pumped five bullets into the legs of a director of Italy's vast Montedison Corp. in a Red Brigades-style "kneecapping.'

No group immediately claimed responsibility for the attack, but such leg shootings are a favorite Red Brigades method of warning their enemies that they have incurred the gang's wrath.

In Turin, Red Brigades founders Renato Curcio and Alberto Frenacheschini called the murder of Moro an "act of revolutionary justice" and "the highest act of humanity" in striking against the state.

Curcio was imediately ejected from the packed and heavily guarded courtroom where he and 12 other Brigades are being tried on terrorism charges.

Moro's family, embittered because his political associates would not capitulate to save his life, meanwhile, says it wants no state funeral or memorials, only silence.

"The family locks itself up in silence and demands silence," said a terse statement from the Moro household.

"History will pass judgment on the life and death of Aldo Moro," said the statement.

Eleanora Moro, Moro's 62-year-old wife, led her three children, Maria Fida, 32, Agnese, 26, and Giovanni, 20, to the morgue of the University of Rome, leaving behind Anna, her pregnant daughter.

"Someone pulled the sheet over his body," a source present at the family's farewell reported. "Mrs. Moro knelt and prayed. She was silent and calm. Only her hands were shaking a bit."

An autopsy today showed that Moro did not die instantly from the 11 bullets fired into his body Tuesday.

Ballistic tests were also planned to see if the 11 shots fired into the region of Moro's heart came from one or several light submachine guns.

★ Five Years Of Blood

ROME (Reuter) — The killing of former Italian premier Aldo Moro climaxed a bloody five-year campaign by the Red Brigades and demonstrated the ease with which the urban guerrillas carry out large-scale operations throughout Italy.

Their numerous shootings in the past few weeks leave no doubt about their tight organization and cold-blooded efficiency. But they had never killed a hostage, preferring instead to gain maximum publicity after their victims are released.

The kidnapping of Moro was also the first time they had attacked a leading personality of the Italian government, their prime target.

"Sentenced to death" for crimes against the working classes attributed to him and his Christian Democratic Party, Moro's days seemed numbered from the day he was kidnapped.

By shooting his five bodyguards, the Red Brigades had raised the stakes in their self-proclaimed civil war to what one top anti-terrorist policeman called "the point of no return, of no compromise."

During the last two years, since Brigades founder Renato Curcio and his chief lieutenants were arrested, the gang has shot dozens of figures from the Italian establishment, including local politicians, businessmen and journalists.

Before Moro was kidnapped, police believed they were dealing with a small force of attackers who sought unprotected targets.

Since Moro was kidnapped, the Brigades have shown just how organized they really are, how they are able to move with ease in many areas of the country.

Nine communiques, which have traced the trial of Aldo Moro before a "people's court," the "sentence of death," the demands for the release of Curcio and others, have been issued through a network of sympathizers in Italy's major cities with obvious efficiency.

The abductors' demands for the release of 13 Italians from three guerrilla gangs showed them to be the apparent heirs of Curcio, a former hotel bell boy who founded the Brigades from workers and students in the north in 1969.

The kidnappers have extracted every last ounce of publicity from the Moro abduction, mounting a me-

Highway Kickbacks Probed

The RCMP is looking into allegations that two employees of the highways ministry working near Princeton accepted favors from heavy-equipment operators in return for calling out their equipment, Highways Minister Alex Fraser said Tuesday.

He said the operators are hired on a day-labor basis throughout the province as needed, at a rate fixed by the ministry.

The minister said he does not know how much money is involved in the accusations or how many firms are involved.

"I don't believe the amount of money involved is great but the principle is the problem," he said.

Fraser said the matter was brought to his attention in November by a group of citizens, and that it was turned over to the attorney-general's ministry following an internal investigation.

A DIVORCE FOR PRINCESS

LONDON (Reuter) — Princess Margaret is to be divorced from Lord Snowdon, her palace announced today.

Margaret, 47, Queen Elizabeth's younger sister who is fifth in line to the British throne, was married in 1960.

The couple has been separated since 1976.

An announcement from Kensington Palace, Margaret's official residence, said: "Her Royal Highness the Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon and the Earl of Snowdon, after two years of separation, have agreed that their marriage should formally be ended.

"Accordingly her Royal Highness will start the necessary legal proceedings."

A spokesman at the palace said the princess, who is in a London hospital suffering from gastro-enteritis, had no plans to remarry.

The princess would continue to have custody of the couple's two children— Lady Sarah Armstrong-Jones, 14, and Viscount Linley, 16, but Lord Snowdon would have access to them.

Lawyers of both Margaret and Lord Snowdon, 48, have been in close touch for some time, and the palace spokesman said legal proceedings would begin within days.

Late Night Ferry

More runs and later sailings will increase B.C. ferry traffic capacity by 20 per cent during the summer months, Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf said Tuesday.

Bawlf, the Victoria MLA responsible for the ferry corporation, said starting June 29 there will be 24 sailings from each terminal on the Swartz Bay-Tsawwassen run Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays and 22 departures on the other four days.

The Queen of Tsawwassen will also make an extra late night run, leaving Swartz Bay at 11 p.m. with a return sailing to the Island at 12.15 a.m. from June 30 through September 5.

"We've had a 20 per cent increase in ferry traffic in the first quarter of this year over last year," Bawlf said.

This increase, coupled with a surge of summer visitors expected for the Capt. Cook Bicentennial festivities, prompted the move to try the extra runs through the summer, he said.

Bawlf also said he is committed to holding fares at their current levels at least through the summer.

The entire ferry service is under study with a view to expanding the service as the corporation looks to the 1980s, he said.

Fleet requirements related to costs will determine if a change in the fare structure is needed. This should be known by the end of this year, he added.

The later sailings of the Queen of Tsawwassen will be closely monitored to see if it is an appropriate service and whether it can be extended to greater use in summers to come.

The increased number of runs means the fleet can carry 4,100 cars each way daily between Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen and 18,800 passengers.

These compare to last summer's maximums of 3,600 cars and 15,000 passengers.

BOY FOUND

Victoria's little boy lost was found today.

Three-year-old Christopher Williams — the object of an all-out search by police and volunteers since he wandered from his home Tuesday afternoon — was reunited with his parents this morning.

Victoria police said the tot had been picked up by a man and woman in the vicinity of the Johnson Street bridge about 5.30 p.m. Tuesday.

The unidentified couple, who had taken him to their home to spend the night, were on their way today to get help in locating his parents when a security guard spotted the boy and alerted police.

Troller Ban Traded Off

WASHINGTON (CP) — Spokesmen for U.S. West-Coast fishermen told a Senate committee today they have agreed to drop a court case that would have closed U.S. waters to Canadian salmon trollers next week.

But the price for that concession, they indicated, is an understanding that American officials will not allow Canadians to expand into more salmon-trolling areas off the U.S. West Coast, as is promised in the proposed Canada-U.S. 1978 fishing agreement.

Senator Warren Magnuson (Dem. Wash.), chairman of the Senate commerce committee, said he would use his considerable influence to try to keep Canadians from gaining any additional salmon-trolling areas.

Canadians, he said, already have the best part of the bargain in reciprocal fishing rights since they allow U.S. fishermen to take groundfish off British Columbia while gaining access to more valuable salmon off the state of Washington.

The proposed 1978 Canada-

Tolmie Mom Sues To Save School

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY
Times Staff

A Tolmie Elementary school parent has filed a Supreme Court writ against the Greater Victoria school board on behalf of her two children.

Helen Falta will appear in court next Wednesday asking for an injunction to stop the closure of Tolmie elementary school in June, her laywer Dave Vickers said today.

"Vickers said Falta claims the board has failed to demonstrate to parents sufficient need to shut down the school and that closure will cause irreparable damage to her children's education.

Tolmie is one of several schools singled out for closure due to declining enrolment.

The school board made its decision after a series of public hearings at each school selected for possible closure.

Board chairman Susan Brice said today the board will proceed with plans for closure of Tolmie.

"I haven't any idea what kind of impact this will have, but the board has made its decision," Brice said.

"It's a local school board responsibility."

But Vickers said the Public Schools Act states the education ministry must approve any school closure.

Ministry approval can come only after affected parents have been fully advised of the need for closure, Vickers said.

And he said Falta has signed an affidavit swearing this step was not taken.

Vickers said Education Minister Pat McGeer is mistaken when he says closure decisions are strictly up to school boards.

McGeer has refused to get involved and will not meet with Falta and other parents who want to appeal school closure decisions.

In a letter to Falta, McGeer said only the sale of board property requires ministry approval.

"For purposes of local autonomy, I would be reluctant as minister of education to interfere with such decisons which are clearly of local responsibility," the letter said.

Vickers said Falta will continue her lawsuit whether or not she receives the injunction.

Vet Pensions Up

OTTAWA (CP) — Disabled veterans will receive about $18 million in increased pensions under plans announced today by Veterans Affairs Minister Dan MacDonald.

MacDonald said in the Commons that totally disabled veterans will receive increases of up to $310 a year,raising their pensions to $7,471 annually.

This increase is in addition to automatic pension raises tied to consumer price rises, the minister said.

Private Hospitals Checked

Teams of nurses will visit private-care facilities participating in the government long-term health care program to ensure patients aren't being over-charged for services.

Health Minister Bob McClelland said the teams are being formed in response to complaints the government has received alleging unfair charges are being levied against patients by a few private operators.

He added it is essential that such practices if they exist, be brought to a halt.

Private facilities are providing about 15,500 beds for the government's new program and are under strict guidelines on what services they must provide for the daily $6.50 fee.

Six nurses are being hired by the ministry of health and will be given special training by the ministry of consumer and corporate affairs to form the teams which will be in operation by mid-May.

Operators must provide laundry, meals, recreation, entertainment and social activities for elderly patients in their care for the daily $6.50 fee.

ELECTION WORD THURSDAY

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau will announce Thursday whether there will be a summer general election, Liberal MPs said today.

MP Herb Gray (Windsor-West) said after the meeting that he sensed a majority of Liberal MPs want a summer election.

But, he added, "at this stage I won't be surprised at anything."

Iceberg Plague Facing Alaska Tankers

By BILL RICHARDS
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — As early as this summer, a giant Alaskan glacier may begin tossing thousands of icebergs of all sizes into the path of the 200,000-ton supertankers hauling oil south from the trans-Alaska pipeline, according to a government study team.

A second group of federal scientists, who have been pondering the nightmare prospect for the U.S. Coast Guard which has jurisdiction over the Alaskan oil shipping lanes, said Tuesday they have come up with these potential solutions to the problem:

—Hang a 2 1-2 mile, $32 million nylon rope across the mouth of the channel near the glacier to corral the passing icebergs and hold them there until they melt.

—Lasso the wayward icebergs, hook them up to a flotilla of tugboats, and tow them off out of the way.

—Shut down the oil tanker traffic, and the pipeline, until the icebergs go away.

Coast guard Capt. Ronald Kollmeyer, who headed the team which prepared the proposed solutions, said that his suggestions, which are now being circulated in draft form among government and scientific circles, drew some laughter at first.

"Some people said go away and don't bug us with off-the-wall ideas like that," said Kollmeyer, who is chief of the ocean science section at the U.S. Coast Guard Academy in New London, Conn.

Kollmeyer's team also suggested as another alternative that a powerful radar station be built along Valdez Arm, the waterway used by the supertankers on their way to the pipeline terminal to spot the icebergs. The Arm is nine miles from the 42-mile-long Columbia glacier which scientists said is showing increasing signs of "calving" icebergs into the shipping lanes.

Once the icebergs are spotted, Kollmeyer said, there is still the problem of how to avoid them.

Last August, the coast guard shut down the Valdez Arm shipping lanes to night tanker traffic for several short periods after the appearance of numbers of icebergs. The U.S. Geological Survey has been studying the glacier with a 14-member scientific team under a two-year $1.3 million project.

The interior department, which oversees USGS, said the team's first-year studies showed that the glacier was increasing its production of icebergs. Some of the icebergs already are floating down Columbia Bay from the glacier and into shipping lanes used by oil tankers.

Officials of ARCO, the largest shipper of Alaskan oil from Valdez, said that about 50 tankers use the port each month. Charles Lynch, an ARCO vice president, said all ships using the port are equipped with collision-avoidance equipment and said he was confident they could avoid icebergs in the sea lane.

Pilot Warned Before Crash

CRANBROOK (CP) — The pilot of a Pacific Western Airlines jet that crashed and burned at the airport near here Feb. 11 after aborting a landing was told eight minutes earlier that a snowblower was on the runway.

The warning is contained in a transcript obtained by the Canadian Press of taped radio messages between the Boeing 737 and the air-radio operator at this southeastern British Columbia city.

The transcript lists the time a person spoke, who was speaking and what he said. The word "confidential" is stamped on each of its three pages.

The transcript was expected to be introduced at the inquest which began Monday into the deaths of 43 persons aboard the jet. Six persons survived.

The transcript shows the aircraft landed at 12:55 p.m. MST in visibility limited to about one kilometre by heavy snow.

At 12:47 p.m., the aircraft acknowledged a message from the air-radio operator that a snow sweeper was clearing the runway.

The transcript quotes the air-radio operator as saying: "A sweeper is on the runway. He has been for some time, trying to keep the snow back for you. I'll let you know what it's like as soon as I get a progress report from him."

The transcript shows that the reply from the jet said "Flight 314, check."

Then the transcript quotes the snowblower operator saying: "Where the hell did he come from?"

Cranbrook air radio replied: "I don't know, he sure didn't call after his first call."

The next words on the transcript were the final words from the aircraft. A voice exclaimed: "We're going to crash."

Just after the crash, the operator reported the disaster to his supervisor.

"I told him (the aircraft) we had a sweeper on the runway," says the transcript. "The next thing I saw him go by on a low approach, and the sweeper was still on the runway."

"So I had a bad day," said the operator, who is still to be called with another 16 witnesses into Canada's sixth-worst air disaster.

The proceedings have packed the small, sweltering courtroom, and the crowd includes 16 lawyers representing the estates of 16 persons killed, one survivor, the federal government, the Boeing Aircraft Company, the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association and PWA.

The lawyers for the companies and governments who could be held liable for the crash are meeting privately to provide quick cash payments to the estates of the 43 persons killed, a lawyer for the airline said Tuesday.

Eric Lane, who represented the airline at the inquest, said in an interview that PWA wants the companies and governments to contribute to a liability fund for relatives, leaving the companies to work out in court who is responsible for the accident.

"If we do, then PWA . . . will step up front and negotiate with all the widows," Lane said. "We don't want any of them to have to sue us.

"And then . . . there will be . . . one major lawsuit that will be between these parties that will decide responsibility for the accident."

TAINTED BAIT USED TO FOOL COYOTES

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — Biologists are using a taste aversion program in northeastern British Columbia to teach coyotes not to kill sheep in a project that could bring an end to the controversial poisoning of predator animals in the province.

The program involves injecting dead sheep baits with lithium chloride which makes the coyote sick but does not kill him, and makes the coyote turn to other animals, such as gophers, mice and ground squirrels for food.

Fred Harper, fish and wildlife branch biologist, said Monday the taste aversion program is a joint project involving the branch, the ministry of agriculture and two Peace River farmers.

"It's not a final, 100 per cent solution to the predator problems, but it's a hell of a big step in the right direction," he said.

"It has reduced sheep losses between 66 and 80 per cent. In Saskatchewan taste aversion was used to protect 22 herds of sheep in 1976 and 40 herds in 1977."

Wolf poisoning resumed in B.C. this year for the first time in about 10 years because of complaints from sheep and cattle ranchers, despite protests from wildlife protection groups.

Dr. Carl Custavson, who pioneered the taste aversion technique at North Dakota State University, said in an interview Monday that the technique is more difficult to teach to wolves because they hunt in a pack.

"You'd have to work out a different bait technology for wolves, but I don't think there are any problems that could not be overcome," he said.

Dr. Frank Tompa, in charge of predator control for the fish and wildlife branch, said wolf poisoning with strychnine is justified because ranchers can lose many expensive cattle to wolves.

Where the Jobs Came From

VANCOUVER (CP) — Figures released Tuesday by Statistics Canada show that the financial, real estate and insurance sector accounted for 7,000 out of a net increase of 9,000 jobs in British Columbia between March and April of this year.

The sector showed an increase of employees to 64,000 in April from 57,000 in March. During the period, the unemployment level in B.C. dropped to 7.7 per cent from 8.5 per cent.

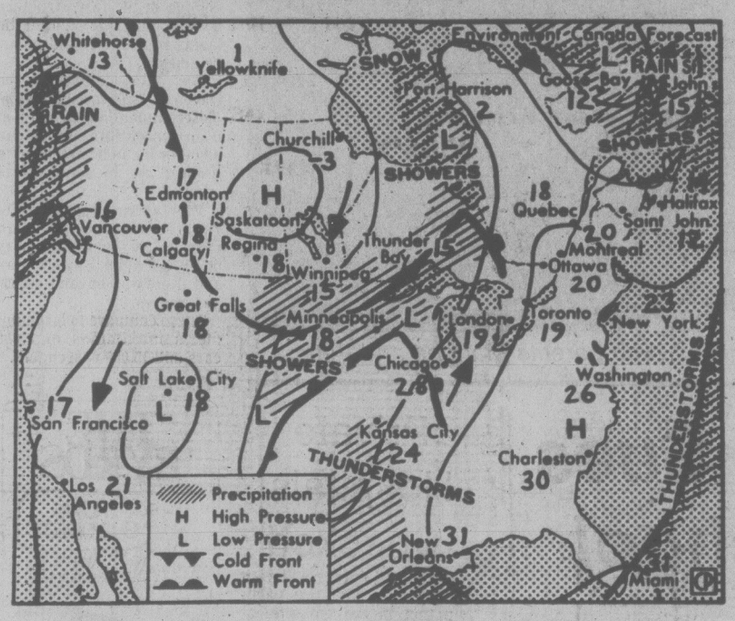

Bert Warrick, regional representative of the Fireman's Fund of Canada, said that firms which left B.C. when the province's former NDP government set up the Crown-owned Insurance Corporation of B.C. are starting to return. Those which stayed have experienced additional activity.

Meanwhile, Elmer McKay, PC MP for Central Nova, said Tuesday in Ottawa that research by his party established the true level of unadjusted unemployment in Canada is 1.4 million or a rate 12.8 per cent.

MacKay was commenting on the latest figures from Statistics Canada which showed 9.3 per cent of the labor force was out of work in April. The report says the seasonally adjusted figure was 8.6 per cent.

MacKay said the federal government was taking the attitude that students who have not worked before are not going to be counted in any statistics.

Map valid until noon Thursday

The small but intense ridge of high pressure which cleared skies in B.C. on Monday and kept them that way most of the night is being pushed inland from the coast by a slowly advancing frontal system. Clouds from this system have reached the north coast and rain is expected later today. Clouds will spread slowly to the south coast with a few showers likely tonight. While the initial thrust of the front will give little or no precipitation as it moves inland on Thursday the unstable air behind it will result in cloudy showery weather along the coast and eventually in the interior.

World-Wide Ties Of Political Hate

Associated Press

Political terrorists, busiest now in Western Europe, are also still active in the Middle East and Latin America.

Italy's Red Brigades, who kidnapped and killed Aldo Moro, are linked in policy and purpose with Arab, West German, Japanese and other terrorist groups.

Authorities in Europe are convinced that an international terrorist network links four major groups of extremists:

—Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization, an umbrella for 15 guerrilla groups, the most militant of which is the Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, pledged to destroy Israel. Their goal is the destruction of Israel and its replacement by a Palestinian state governed by the PLO.

—West Germany's Red Army Faction, an outgrowth of the Baader-Meinhof Gang founded 10 years ago by Andreas Badder, an aspiring artist, and woman journalist Ulrike Meinhof. Both are dead.

—Japan's United Red Army, formed nine years ago by students to oppose the U.S.-Japanese security treaty. Within a year its Arab Committee established a base in Beirut, where its members trained for suicide missions including the 1972 massacre at Israel's Lod Airport, in which three Japanese men opened fire on a crowd of Roman Catholic pilgrims, killing or wounding 98 persons.

—Junta de Co-ordinacion Revolucionario, which combines revolutionaries from Chile, Argentina, Bolivia, Paraguay and Uruguay. It claims tens of thousands of its comrades have been killed or wounded in those countries and says its purpose is to challenge authoritarian governments.

There are also a number of terrorist organizations whose activities and aims are limited to one country: the largely Roman Catholic Irish Republican Army and Protestant guerrilla groups fighting it in Northern Ireland; ETA, the underground army of Spanish Basques fighting for the independence of the Basque provinces in northwest Spain, the Puerto Ricans of the FALN in the United States and right-wing death squads in Brazil and Argentina who kidnap and murder leftists with tacit government approval.

A CIA data bank lists about 1,300 acts of international terrorism since 1967, including more than 70 assassinations, 150 kidnappings, 150 hijackings of planes and trains and nearly 700 bombings. In many cases Arabs, West Germans, Italian, and Latin American terrorists worked together.

'I Kiss You For Last Time'

Car in which Moro's body was found

ROME (AP) — "I kiss you for the last time, kiss the children," Aldo Moro wrote his wife in a final good-bye a few days before his death.

One of a stream of letters sent to government, political leaders and relatives during his long captivity, Moro's last message was received by his family Friday—the same day his Red Brigades kidnappers announced they were carrying out the death sentence imposed on the former premier.

The full text has never been made public by the family but portions were published in several newspapers.

Using his wife Eleonora's nickname, the letter began:

"Dear Norina. I was told that soon they will kill me. I kiss you for the last time, kiss the children."

In another portion he told his family, "If they (the government and the Christian Democrat party) had wanted they would have done something" to spare his life.

This referred to the refusal by both the government and his party to negotiate with the kidnappers, who demanded the release of 13 imprisoned terrorists in exchange for Moro's life.

The letter was described as an "addio" or goodbye from the former premier to his family—the saddest of any of his messages, written in desperate tones.

Moro's last letter was reported to have been picked up by his daughter Anna in a public telephone booth near Milvio Bridge, in northern Rome, not far from Moro's home.

Italians Cry Revenge

Initial findings indicated that Moro's body was still warm when Red Brigade terrorists loaded it into the car, and that the vehicle was abandoned soon afterward, the surgeon who performed the autopsy said.

It was not yet established if Moro was standing when shot, or how far away the gunmen were. Eleven bullets hit the left side of his chest and around the heart, the surgeon said.

"With so many bullets, it is hard to tell which one caused his death," the doctor commented.

The universal disgust over the slaying appeared, for now at least, to have frustrated the Red Brigades avowed aim of driving a wedge between the Communist Party and the Christian Democrats.

The group justifies its terrorism by saying it seeks a fascist coup, which would spark a Communist reaction and lead to a genuine revolution of the masses.

Catholics and Communists, each with their own banners, marched jointly to the Colosseum in Rome for a demonstration.

"Either we go to the rally for Moro or we go to the funeral of democracy," one Communist youth said.

The big Communist and non-Communist unions also called on workers to go on strike for two hours today and meet in their factories to "step up mobilization and struggle against terrorism."

The National Association of Industrial Executives urged the bosses to join the rallies.

A steady stream of men and women went to the national headquarters of the Christian Democrats in downtown Rome through the night to sign a memorial register.

Railway workers and printers, however, called off a series of strikes to assure uninterrupted transportation and information.

Five Years Of Bloodshed

thodical and traumatic war of nerves with the authorities.

In the last two weeks they had made Moro their spokesman. His numerous letters from his "people's prison" desperately called for a prisoner exchange that had long since been rejected by the government.

"We cannot hope to change Italy as quickly as Castro did Cuba," Curcio once wrote from jail. "We must think in terms of a 50-year armed struggle."

Curcio has been charged with forming an armed band to subvert the social and political order of Italy. His trial opened on March 9 after months of intimidation.

The trial was first postponed last year after the Brigades shot to death the president of the Turin Law Society and terrified jurors refused to serve.

Curcio had flirted with left-wing groups in his younger days, but after student riots in 1968 in which two young people were killed in battles with the police, he and his comrades turned to guerrilla tactics.

Their first escapades were kidnappings of businessmen who were later released for ransom. But this changed after Curcio was arrested in 1974.

Police believe there are a few, maybe a dozen, hardcore Brigade members. They suspect the guerrillas can go quickly underground in the industrial centres of the north where they are known to have sympathizers among factory workers.

There are at least two and possibly three or four bands who use the name Red Brigades and it is not clear whether they have a single mastermind.

All Brigades' statements proclaim an ultra-left-wing line against what they call bourgeois imperialism, though Italy's Communist Party has hinted heavily that fascists may be involved.

Cure Worse Than Disease

Although the provincial government has been talking for months about its plan to establish a compulsory treatment program for heroin users, details of it have been slow to come to public attention. It has seemed that the actual format of the program would become clear only after the government introduces in the House legislation to get the program under way.

However, some lawyers who have seen a secret government white paper on the plan have now made public some of its contents. If the information is correct, what the government is planning is a program that will disregard practically every principle of justice that our democratic society values.

Put simply, the aim of the government plan is to get around the fact that under federal law, heroin use and addiction are not in themselves crimes by calling them health problems and forcing treatment on those suffering from them. But apparently under the white paper the end result could be that users or addicts could be locked up in a jail-cum-hospital for as long as three years, without benefit of a trial or other judicial proceedings, solely on the decision of non-medical personnel, basically civil servants.

The decision to commit someone for treatment would, according to the paper, be made by the "director of area control headquarters," and there is special emphasis that the decision would not be made by medical personnel. That seems a little peculiar, given the official assumption that heroin use is a health problem. After all, medical personnel are very much involved in determining whether someone needs treatment for other health problems in which the government is involved — mental illness, contagious diseases, venereal disease.

Another oddity in the white paper is that "no ex-user should be discharged from any treatment unit unless there exists a community supervision program equal to the task of providing an adequate level of support." That appears to mean that former users could be kept in the jail-cum-hospital indefinitely, not because of anything they did, but because the government was not ready to provide an adequate follow-up program.

Appeals would be allowed from the original decision to commit and other administrative decisions, but while waiting for the appeal to be heard, the person would have to undergo treatment. Theoretically, this could mean that someone who was mistakenly identified as a user could be given other drugs, such as the addictive chemical methadone, could be hypnotized, could be forced to undergo behavioral modification, all in the weeks or months before a court decided he should never have been in treatment in the first place.

Yet another peculiarity is the carrot-and-stick approach the government would take to encourage users to turn themselves in for the treatment program voluntarily. The paper suggests that those who volunteer for treatment would be locked up for a shorter time than those who were committed for treatment by relatives, social service agencies or policemen. This seems an unusual way to tackle a health problem: surely it would make more sense to decide the length of treatment needed on the basis of the severity of the disease and the response to treatment.

Most people in B.C. would agree that heroin addiction is a serious problem in our society and one worthy of strong attack by the government. But an attack plan that involves the abrogation of so many of our cherished civil rights might well turn out to be a cure far worse than the original disease.

Challenge Their Minds

The Greater Victoria school board took an excellent step this week when it decided to try to get approval to offer the international baccalaureate program to top high school students.

The program, now offered in Canada only by a handful of independent schools, would provide to the top students a greater intellectual challenge than they now can obtain from the regular high school curriculum. At the same time it would prepare them well for university, perhaps even allowing them to enter at the second-year level.

Most school programs today are run for the average student, and the emphasis in special programs is for students who for some reason or other cannot cope with the regular program. All these programs are needed, but an equally great need is for programs for the better-than-average student who too easily becomes bored and discouraged with ordinary classes. These students are far too often working far below their potential, a particular shame given the amount of potential they have.

The international baccalaureate program would give them a special place to exercise their talents and challenge their minds. It would undoubtedly be worth whatever small extra outlay it might cost the school district.

RICHARD GWYN

Fed-Up Canada Sounds Off

OTTAWA — To have guessed that the surprise Gallup poll — 41 per cent each for the Liberals and Conservatives — would have turned out exactly as it did, you should have been present two months ago at the Golden Dragon restaurant in North Bay. Or perhaps at the Grey Goose restaurant in Tilbury, Ont. Or maybe in the gymnasium of the high school in Oliver, B.C.

In North Bay last March 4, 1,000 people turned up to nominate travel agent Marie Marchand as Conservative candidate in a riding, Nipissing, that elected its last Tory MP in 1911. In Tilbury, on March 2, 900 people gathered to go through the formality of nominating uncontested candidate David (Discount Dave) Conklin. At Oliver, on March 15, 1,100 people showed up on a mid-week afternoon.

Unnoticed by the press and ignored by the pundits, Conservative nominating meetings have been the best-attended since the party's heyday in 1958. In Calgary South, three weeks ago, 1,700 came for the uncontested nomination of John Thompson. In Parry Sound this week, 900 showed up for the ritual renomination of incumbent MP Stan Darling.

Crowds for Tories

By caring enough to come to meetings that were unadorned, which is the point, by media stars like, say, Toronto Mayor David Crombie or ex-Conference Board president Robert de Cotret, Canadians have for months been showing how they felt. All the Gallup poll does is to translate the mood of fed-up Canada into political numbers which give the Conservatives the lead in every region except Quebec.

Fed-up Canada is fed-up with the dollar, unemployment, inflation, a national unity issue that goes on and on and on too much permissiveness (whether this permissiveness is real or imagined is, in political terms, irrelevant).

Fed-Up Canada's expectations about the ability of any government or of any person to cure these ills are low. M. Jones said it all in a letter to the Toronto Star this week: "First let's get rid of Pierre Trudeau. Then, after four years, get rid of Conservative leader Joe Clark. It's all so simple."

To examine it at a higher political analysis, Fed-Up Canada, it seems, no longer accepts Finance Minister Jean Chretien's persuasive argument that, "If we're bad, the alternative is even worse." Instead, Fed-Up Canada appears to have decided that even if the Conservative alternative is no better, it is at least different.

The alternative that Fed-Up Canada really wants, and is even more fed-up because it knows it can't have, is, I'd wager a bet, former finance minister John Turner.

"Voter volatility" is today's freshminted cliche. Rather, at a guess, many Canadians have been thinking the way they now are doing for a long time.

National unity blocked Canadians from saying aloud what they were thinking in their heads. Then sometime last winter national unity lost its power to persuade or to frighten. Instead as the dollar sank, Canadians became frightened for their economy.

Yet the polls, through late winter, still showed Trudeau looking down from the heights at Clark. Trudeau so dominated the medium — by his television troika of the February first ministers conference, the February Liberal convention in Ottawa and the March speech to the Economic Club in New York — that Canadians could not bring themselves to send a message back to him.

Now they are sending a message. To those who always have hated Trudeau and who always will even if he saved Confederation tomorrow morning and the dollar tomorrow afternoon, are now being added significant numbers of those who always have been unable to make up their minds whether they disliked Trudeau more, or liked Clark less. If Gallup's numbers remain unchanged, the Conservatives, although decimated in Quebec, would win the rest of the country by a margin of close to two to one.

Polls are not carved in stone. At best, these days, they are scratched in fudge. If Trudeau does call an election now, he will come out fiery and fighting, which always is how Canaians best like him.

Done Nothing

The missing link, in this political daisy chain is Clark. "I have to confess, I don't understand the poll," a senior Clark aide commented to me. "We, to be honest, have done nothing."

Precisely. Clark's inertia has been creative. He has removed himself from the line of sight between Trudeau haters and their target.

To get fed-up Canada to follow him into the ballot booths, though, Clark will have to do more. He will have to show he is filled with the stuff of leadership, not of policies and programs which are little believed in these days.

Maybe so, maybe not. Maybe that's just conventional political analysis. Maybe fed-up Canada already has made up its mind, to get rid of Pierre Trudeau today, and then, four years later, get rid of Joe Clark.

GERALD GODIN

Negotiator, But No Mandate

I know Claude Ryan has become something sacred for many Quebecers, and probably for the majority of English-speaking Quebecers, since he decided to run for the leadership of the Quebec Liberal party. His courage is lauded, and so are his qualities. He is described as "the saviour of Confederation," "the last chance of Canada," or "the man in the middle of the road," the only one who can break the deadlock in the Levesque-Trudeau relationship, and make things go smoothly again between the two founding nations.

He has been wise enough so far to stop short of looking like a man who would not, also, fight for Quebec. In recent interviews, he has said, just like a Pequiste, that he too would go for more powers for Quebec. And in his book Une Societe Stable, the list of the jurisdictions he wants either to repatriate or open discussions with the feds about splitting them anew between both levels of government, is impressive.

Dead-End Street

We are told by the Liberals from Quebec as well as from Canada, that we are no longer "separatists," because we have discovered along the way that separatism is a dead-end. Mind you, the separatists are always there: Marcel Chaput, Pierre Bourgault and other fiery leaders of the first hours. But they decided almost a decade ago to join with the more moderate Parti Quebecois, born from a resolution presented by the delegation of the riding of Laurier in a Liberal convention in Quebec City, in October, 1967. The resolution states very clearly the objective which was and still is sovereignty-association.

"In short," states the resolution, "we would have a regime within which two nations, one whose homeland would be Quebec, the other arranging the rest of the country to suit itself, would associate themselves in a new adapation of the current formula of the common market to form a new entity which could, for example, call itself the Canadian Union."

As of today, some details need streamlining, but the essential thrust of it is right there. When the motion was presented to the Liberals of Laurier by their MNA, Rene Levesque, the vote was 37 in favor and seven against.

As soon as Claude Ryan got hold of the resolution, he commented in Le Devoir: "Another step towards the moment of truth." That was 11 years ago!

But that party is no longer a federalist party. It has become a "special status" party. Maybe it is a fact that there are not many "separatists" left, the way they were 10 years ago, but I do not see either many "federalists" left, the way they were 10 years ago.

No one wants a Canada as it is today. Everybody talks about a "renewed Canada."

When one talks about renewing something, he talks about opening discussions. In these upcoming discussions, Quebecers will have to choose

CLAUDE RYAN

What is the main difference between these two men? From a straight political point of view, Rene Levesque is going for a clear-cut mandate earned through a referendum. This amounts to a certified cheque.

The other man, Claude Ryan, will be going for a "no" at the referendum, and then, if his party wins the elections, he will try to get something from Ottawa. This amounts to a blank cheque given him by the people of Quebec.

It amounts to telling the people of Quebec: "You can trust me. I will deliver what I promised you, a renewed Canada." To me, he is the negotiator without a mandate.

He is presented as the newest figure in Quebec politics. But in fact, his stance is exactly the stance of all previous Quebec premiers starting with Jean Lesage: the federal-provincial merry-go-round, the new-constitution threering circus, the "you win some, you lose some" scheme.

Why did the Parti Quebecois propose a referendum? Simply because, from a sheer legal point of view, it is the only way out of those merry-go-rounds and circuses. It is, in fact, the only way to have the people play their role in our constitutional history, and not merely the politicians.

It is replacing the temporary, the politicians, by the permanent, the people.

If you do not do that, we will have had, during the past decades and will have for the coming decades, the Roberts Conference, the Lesage-Pearson confrontation, the Johnson-Trudeau bout, the Premier Davis conference at York University, the Levesque-Trudeau confrontation, the Ryan-Levesque discussions and so forth. A whole series of men, some already dead, others writing their memoirs, others waiting in the aisles, all of them passersby under the eyes of a unchanged constitution.

The only way out of that deadlock is the referendum. Only through a referendum will the people of Quebec really express their will, and a binding one at that, for deep changes in the constitution.

In Great Britain, it is called "the consent of the people."

The Liberals themselves, and especially Ryan, feel that the Quebec people are in for big changes in the constitution. But they do not seem to want the people to come of age as a protagonist in these changes, since they do not want the people to give them a clear-cut mandate for changes.

Starting Point

Men will pass, the "yes" vote at the referendum will stay. And the only way for the Quebec people to achieve real changes in the constitution will be to vote "yes" at the referendum. It is the starting point for a new deal.

When asked about the inconsistencies in his position of negotiator without a mandate, Ryan answers that both sides, the federal and the provincial, will have to table clear-cut proposals of changes before the referendum is held.

So the people will be asked to bargain their vote at the referendum for written promises for changes. But will these promises be worth more than the paper they are written on, after they have voted "no" at the referendum?

That is the context in which the referendum campaign will be waged. What will the people of Quebec do? Make your bets and may the people win!

Harebrained Idea

I was glad to read that Sam Bawlf's latest harebrained scheme for a third shopping centre downtown has been rejected by the Real Estate Board.

I don't know why developers always want to develop, but Bawlf's scheme doesn't make any sense at all.

We don't need more shops downtown. We need more shoppers.

And we need more parking and better buses downtown. Make it easier to get to, and easier to stay in, and more people will shop in Victoria.

Bawlf should abandon crackpot plans for a third major centre, and work to make downtown a better place to shop in.

Save the Wolves

It was shocking to learn that Recreation Minister Sam Bawlf contemplated giving permission to stockmen in northern B.C. to poison wolves.

Bawlf is probably as aware as I am of the years of effort that have been expended in fighting to save the wolves. How many books and articles have been written by naturalists and scientists to that end one couldn't count. Also he must be aware of the suffering caused by poison and the unpredictable end of the poison put out for wolves. How many valuable dogs, how many beloved pets, how many harmless wild creatures including birds, will suffer as a result of lifting the ban on poison. What about the fledglings in the nest? What about the young animals in their dens? These creatures will die of starvation. Is that a pleasant thought?

Wolves are an important link in nature's plan. They prey on weak, sick or injured animals thus assuring more food for the remainder and thus preventing the physical decline of a species.

We are stewards of the wild. We have no right to be wantonly destructive which is akin to murder.

If a rancher is being harassed by a wolf or a pack that may be starving or has developed a blood lust, permit that rancher to shoot them mercifully without exposing other creatures to a ghastly end.

If there is one thing more than another that will lose the Social Credit party votes this policy will surely do it. — Miss D. Gordon Cox, 205-2646 Cook.

Times Policy

The Times reminds readers that it does not withhold the names of writers of letters to the editor unless reasonable cause is shown why this should be done. Addresses will be withheld on request. We also urge readers to keep their letters as brief as possible, preferably under 300 words, and remind them that names and addresses of letter-writers will be verified.

Be Kind to Animals

Do people really realize the impact that animals have on our daily lives? They provide food, clothing, entertainment, companionship and a variety of other tangible and intangible necessities to mankind. This has been true throughout history, but we often take the animal kingdom for granted.

This is true of some of our beautiful wildlife, valuable domestic livestock, and companion animals such as the family dog or cat or horse. We so often regard things as dispensible, or simply for our convenience, and we should all stop to appreciate the vital role of animal life to mankind.

This letter is prompted because May 7-13 is Be Kind To Animals Week. The observance is sponsored by the Victoria branch of the B.C. SPCA and humane agencies throughout the area.

Emphasis this year is on the overpopulation of dogs and cats; one act of kindness is to have your pet spayed or neutered to prevent unwanted offspring. Consider the fate of the unwanted. It is anything but kind. — D. V. Adams, Secretary-Manager, Victoria Branch, B.C. Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Quebec Taxes

Prime Minister Trudeau's proposal to divide Quebec's retail sales tax rebate among the taxpayers of Quebec seems most unfair.

Those Quebecers who do not pay taxes obviously are living below the poverty line yet must pay the retail sales tax on consumer goods, so why should this group, whose financial need is greatest, be excluded from the rebate?

In B.C. everybody benefits from the two per cent reduction in the sales tax, so that $186 million retail sales tax rebate should be shared by every citizen of Quebec. — Ruby Pearson, 2085 Avondale Road.

Two Years' Jail — But for What?

By MICHAEL VALPY
The Sun

MONTREAL — In the grey greyness late last week — grey walls, grey carpet, grey ceiling — of the courtroom on the 15th floor of the Palais de Justice on Rue Notre Dame, grey-haired Peter Treu, 56, declined the offer to sit down. ("If you're too tired or too nervous, you may, Mr. Treu," said Sessions Court Judge Luc Trudel. "I'm going to be long.")

But no . . . the etiquette of the court to be observed: when you are sentenced, you stand. So ramrod stiff he stood amidst his three lawyers as Judge Trudel wended his way through an hour's soft-spoken words to get to his decision to send Mr. Treu to jail for two years.

For what?

That's the question. For what?

For justice to be done, there must always be the public perception that justice has been done. And in the case of Peter Treu, that public perception cannot exist because he was tried in camera; the details of the offences alleged against him were alleged in camera; his defence was made in camera, and the reasons for his conviction were given in camera.

All the public has been permitted to hear — officially — is Judge Trudel saying that he based his conviction on the in-camera evidence before him.

But, of course, whenever the authorities move with secrecy, the inevitable happens — the public becomes bombarded with rumor, part truths, surmises either accurate or wild or parts of each: who knows? This has been the case with Peter Treu. And his case, as a result, has not been so much a trial as it has been a debate — between the state trying him secretly and the press speculating on the evidence against him and challenging the state's propriety in conducting a secret trial.

A thoroughly unsatisfactory business.

Mr. Treu was convicted on two counts under the Official Secrets Act: with having "unlawfully retained information and documents" (sentence: two years) and with having "failed to take reasonable care of the documents concerned, or conducted himself in such a manner as to endanger their safety" (sentence: one year concurrent). He could have received the maximum: 14 years.

Secrets Act Shields trial of engineer

The case has now gone to appeal, and I am not going to comment on the conviction or sentence; my comments are solely about the process of secret trial, the problems it causes and about whether a secret trial was justified.

It should be pointed out that Judge Trudel is extremely upset at the press comments during the trial; that he announced he is going to write a report on the press coverage and turn it over to Quebec's attorney-general, and that he devoted a fair number of words in his sentencing address to telling Mr. Treu that people cannot be tried in the newspapers, that the only place where people can defend themselves against an accusation of wrong-doing is in court.

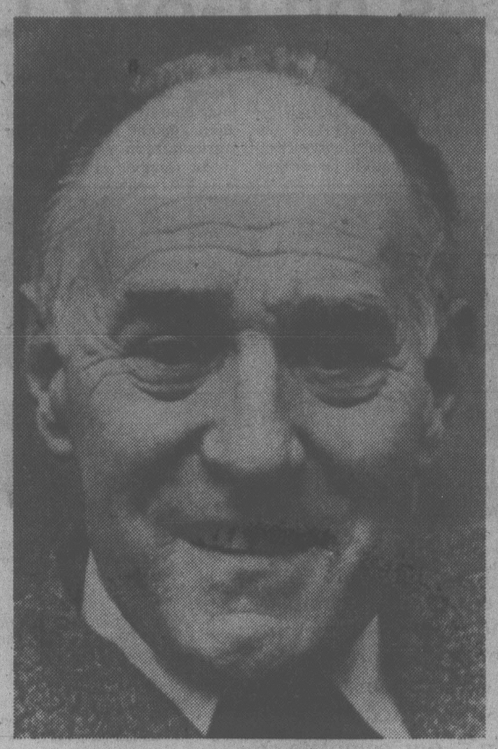

There is no doubt that the case has been tried in the press, and that, by conventional yardsticks, certain Eastern newspapers could be found guilty of contempt of court. But when the state takes secret actions that can lead to an individual being deprived of his liberty, one wonders if it is not the duty of a free press to challenge those actions — at risk to itself of contempt citations. That's one issue.

Mr. Treu is an electronics engineer. He designed, under a Northern Telecom contract with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, a ground-to-ground communication system and a ground-to-air surveillance system, lumped together under the name of Project NADGE (an acronym for NATO Air Defence Ground Environment). Some — perhaps many — of the documents which he has been convicted of possessing illegally he authored himself.

Mr. Treu's defence is that the NADGE system had become declassified and that he was free (with the Canadian government's consent) to develop it himself and peddle it abroad (the Crown and defence both referred in Thursday's sole open court session to a "prospectus" prepared for "several Asian countries" with China, India and Pakistan named).

The Crown's position is that Mr. Treu and his company did not have security clearance to be in possession of the NADGE system's suppporting documents — 500 pounds of them — and that the language "and models" related to the prospectus clearly gave clues to classified NATO information. Moreover, the Crown says, some of the documents had been certified as destroyed — by whom it was not said.

TREU . . . fought with bureaucracy

Mr. Treu responds that his post-Northern Telecom security status was altered by a government official without his knowledge and that he is being victimized by bureaucracy.

The point is that surely the truth could have been adduced in open court without revealing classified material. And that, therefore, the people could have been satisfied that justice had been done in their name.

Were the documents declassified? Crown attorney Francois Handfield in open court quotes from the transcript testimony of a "Captain Schubol" saying "the sum of the documents are more than confidential, they are secret" and a "Major Weber" saying "They are very sensitive." Okay. Secret. Next?

Did he have the Canadian government's consent to do what he was doing? Good lord, surely someone can be found in Ottawa who can say yes or no without bringing down the western alliance.

Did the prospectus point to classified NATO information? Okay — that might have required a closed hearing.

Was Mr. Treu's security status altered without his knowledge? That's something else that could be dealt with openly. And surely the second charge — how he kept the documents — did not require an in-camera hearing (it's all in the regulations of the Official Secrets Act: the required locks and filing cabinets).

Do you know what the Crown has spent on this trial? About $40,000 and two years. It's cost Mr. Treu $15,000. To give us what? Rumors, surreptitious comments out of the sides of people's mouths and out-of-court press conferences (by Mr. Treu). A thoroughly unsatisfactory business.

'Railways Not Built Just to Make Money'

By W. A. RODGER

(Rodger is a locomotive engineer who lives in Vancouver. This is a letter to the editor of The Sun)

This province does need rail lines in the north, just as it needed another rail line, built at tremendous cost more than 100 years ago, to bring it into the fold of confederation.

This province needs the Fort Nelson line. It will also be proven in years to come that it needs the Dease Lake extension as well.

I agree the line was hastily constructed and it runs through areas that are certainly not conducive to the laying of steel. There are portions of track that must, for the good of all concerned, be rerouted. But to abandon the line and the people of the north . . . my God, Mr. Editor, that is not something you wipe out with a slash of your editorial pencil.

Railways, unlike newspapers, are not built for the sole purpose of making money; it's nice if they do, but the purpose of a railway is to open up country, to establish and maintain communication and trade links, to blaze the way into virgin country, to haul in the settler and then haul out the products of his labors.

Where would this country be today had it not been for the far-sighted men who built the Canadian Pacific?

CP rails slid out of sight for years in the eastern muskegs and nearby trees were slashed down and tossed into holes caused by washouts. They didn't have plywood in those days. If they had, I'm sure the gandy dancers who built the transcontinental would have used it. Out on the western prairies, when the steel ran out, timbers were wrapped in green buffalo hides and laid down to carry the weight of the locomotives until more steel could be bought.

Can you imagine the hullaballoo there would be on the editorial pages today if some company said it was going to drill and blast and gouge and tunnel its way through nearly 700 miles of solid rock forming the backbone of a continent? But they did it back in those days — they built themselves a railway. And they made a country of which we are damn proud today.

There is a wealth of resources in the northern portion of this province and the most economical way to move that material is by rail. There is no other form of land transport as economical as rail transport.

Suppose the Fort Nelson extension is closed and that the lumber companies, the oil companies, and the pipelines continue to develop in the area. And let us suppose the government upgrades the Alaska Highway to the point where it is a double lane of pavement: to handle the materials in a 100-car train (not exceptionally long these days) would require at least 200 trucks. That's to handle just one train, one way.

A great business for the truckers. It's no wonder that the most influential brief presented to the royal commission was prepared by the Trimac trucking company. The brief was thinly disguised as coming from a consulting firm, but the logo on the cover can be seen on dozens of 18-wheelers that run on our provincial highways every day. Hardly a non-biased report.

I have no grudge against the trucker; he has to make a living as well. But even a trucker with an ounce of common sense wouldn't want to make the run from Fort St. John to Nelson bucking that stream of a couple of hundred other big rigs.

And what about the guy who either through desire or necessity drives the Alcan? Where are the private cars going to be squeezed in among all that rolling commerce? A lot of them are going to be squeezed out (and squeezed damned dead) if that kind of traffic is allowed to build on what is known to be one of the worst highways in the northern hemisphere.

And what about the subsidy the trucker gets? The trucking companies are rolling along on your dollars and mine. Don't ever for one minute try to tell anyone that their licence fees and the extra tax on gasoline or diesel fuel pays for even a thousandth of the cost of upkeep of any highway the trucks roll over.

But railways must meet all of their costs of maintainence, upkeep and repair of roadbed and rolling stock. It's no bloody wonder the line can't show a profit, and won't for many years to come — just like rail lines in other parts of Canada and the United States.

Why isn't your paper screaming about the $100 million over-run on Vancouver's provincial courthouse building? That amount of money would keep the Fort Nelson extension running for two to three years. But then all you would have would be a couple of tracks stretching into infinity toward the north, not an edifice for jurists to ponder their next case in.

You would have a railway carrying materials to and from a people who still have enough guts and spirit left to build a country, not a glistening artificial ice rink with adjacent exercise courts, where underworked and overpaid executives and the sleek little downtown secretaries can go to while away their lunch hour.

I guess one's priorities get all screwed up in the direct relation to the distance one is from the problem. It is too bad that the editors and reporters of The Vancouver Sun seem to be so very far away.

Looking Out for No. 1

By HAYNES JOHNSON
Washington Post

There's considerable difficulty, it seems, in gauging the political currents. You know, the "Who is Jimmy Carter?" and "What's he all about?" and "Does anybody care?" and "Whither America?" kinds of questions we'll be increasingly subjected to in the months to come. Candidates already are limbering up for the Big Run, the political consulting business is booming, the journalists are out testing the political winds and divining the public mood.

Here, as a public service, free of charge to pollsters, pundits, politicians, scholars, sociologists, psychohistorians and just plain citizens, is the sure-fire, fail-safe survey of who we are and where we're going as we head into the 1980s.

We are selfish, vain, narcissistic, insecure, introspective, overweight, ugly — and we don't give a damn about politics. Self-improvement is our preoccupation, hedonism our philosophy, looking out for No. 1 our theme. That last trait especially speaks to what passes for the politics of the moment.

Evidence? you say. Why, it's clearly spelled out for all to see each Sunday morning in the pages of The New York Times Review. That's right, the elite, esoteric NYT Book Review, the authoritative journal of the book business, the bible of the trade. There, carefully compiled from computer-processed sales figures covering 1,400 bookstores in every region of the country, are the latest best-sellers. They are, I submit, an incomparable guide to mass tastes, and to the real politics of the late 1970s.

The other week, for instance, the nonfiction newcomer to the best-seller list was entitled Adrien Arpel's Three-Week Crash Makeover, Shapeover Beauty Program, a winner at 12 bucks offering us advice from the head of an international cosmetics corporation. It takes its place alongside such other timely tracts as The Woman's Dress for Success Book, a guide to tasteful apparel, and Designing Your Face, on how best to use cosmetics.

Three best-sellers on cosmetics and clothes alone. In keeping with them, stylistically are the other self-improvement-at-any-price books: The Complete Book of Running, our No. 1 seller, competes with Inner Skiing, about improving your mental attitude, and Arnold: The Education of a Body Builder, which gives tips from the superstar of the film "Pumping Iron."

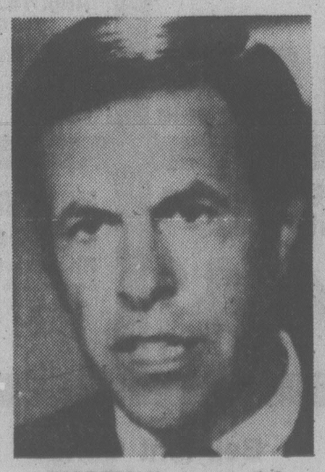

Five of the remaining nine best sellers qualify as escapism: All Things Wise and Wonderful, the adventures of a Yorkshire vet, ranks in sales just above Gnomes, which is all about the little people, while The Second Ring of Power deals with a spirtual quest and encountering a witch, and The Country Diary of an Edwardian Lady presents — well, just what its title implies.

Close to the top is a mod bit of introspective wrestling with self and intimate relationships from an author who previously cashed in with an account of women's sexual fantasies. Now, Nancy Friday's My Mother/Myself looks at how mothers and daughters relate, as they say. Presumably, it's the other side of the Oedipus complex. Whichever way you look at it, sex still sells.

As for politics, forget it. Nothing yet on Jimmy Carter has made the lists, even including that once certain ticket to best-sellerdom — being picked by the Book of the Month Club as its main selection. It's too early to say whether the latest Book of the Month Club Carter selection, James Wooten's Dasher, will reach the rarified heights. But an earlier choice, Jules Witcover's account of the Carter campaign, failed to follow Theodore White's guaranteed path to the top.

No politics at all — unless, that is, you consider H. R. Haldeman's The Ends of Power a political study. I say it's morbid fascination with neurotic public behavior.

That's the current list, with one notable exception: the book that's been on the bestseller list twice as long as any other. It's Robert J. Ringer's — is that name real? — Looking Out for Number One. In case you missed the point, The Times succinctly puts it best: "Getting yours."

HALDEMAN . . . neurotic?

For more than a generation, nonfiction books have been the big sellers in the hardcover book business. And, looking back on those lists, the topics that led to the most sales did reflect the public concerns of the times.

A few years ago the Watergate trauma inspired a plethora of successes, not only from Woodward and Bernstein but other players, major and minor: The Magruders and Deans, as husbands and wives in separate accounts, and Colson on conversion were among those who chronicled the Nixon years and fed the public appetite for insights on the scandals.

Before that the stream of Kennedy books dominated the trade in the years following the 1963 assassination. In 1967, for instance, William Manchester's Death of a President outsold its leading fictional counterpart by nearly 2 to 1. During the Kennedy years, strong topical themes, with a flavor of reform and expose on serious public issues, were nonfiction successes: James Baldwin's The Fire Next Time called the turn on black unrest and the prospect of urban violence while Rachel Carson's Silent Spring sounded an alarm on man's abuse of the environment.

Best-sellers of the Eisenhower era clearly reflected the period. Religious and spiritual themes won their way to the top with such saccharine books as Norman Vincent Peale's The Power of Positive Thinking, Fulton Sheen's Life Is Worth Living.

It was no time for experimentation; the public stayed with favorite authors, who struck familiar and safe themes. Those attitudes were in marked contrast to the war years. Then, the book-buying public had reached out in all directions, hungrily assimilating a wide range of serious works. As Time magazine remarked then, it was the most remarkable period in the history of U.S. publishing. In 1943, when serious, sobering books were consumed almost as fast as they could be produced, the No. 1 publishing success was a political book — Wendell Wilkie's One World. The former GOP presidential candidate's account of his trip around the world sold more than 1.5 million copies that year alone.

Now, it's self-improvement — and watch out for No. 1. But a different sort of self-help: even the how-to-do-it sex books of such recent success appear to have lost some of their appeal. Now, it's leave me alone. Just let me paint my face, slim my shape, dress in style, and look attractive. Then everything will be OK.

After all, it's the facade that clearly counts.

FILES PUBLIC, LAUK SAYS

A former NDP cabinet minister told the legislature Tuesday that his personal files in the government have been made public.

When Social Credit took over as government in December, 1975, then economic development minister Gary Lauk took his files home with him. He said they were his personal property and that departmental files had been left in place.

Don Phillips, economic development minister in the Social Credit government has been baiting Lauk about his files since then. At one point he threatened to start a lawsuit to get them back.

When Phillips mentioned the files once again Tuesday, Lauk rose on a question of privilege to advise the house that all his files were handed over to the University of B.C. archives some time ago.

Lauk said government members can look at the files any time they wish.

Houses on Gov't Land?

Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt said Tuesday he will look into allegations that the former president of the Social Credit party moved two houses onto agricultural land he is leasing from the provincial government.

Alex Macdonald (NDP—Vancouver East) told the legislature that George Dreidiger, through Dreidiger Brothers Farm Ltd., had leased 243 acres in Langley managed by the agricultural management branch of the agriculture ministry.

"In October last year he moved two houses on it in violation of the bylaws of Langley — no permit to move, no cash performance bond — and contrary to the lease," said Macdonald.

Independent Probe Urged

Former attorney-general Alex Macdonald called on the provincial government Tuesday to launch an independent inquiry into the 402 B.C. break-ins conducted without warrants by the RCMP since 1970.

Macdonald (NDP—Vancouver-East) accused Attorney-General Garde Gardom of a casual approach to the investigation into the break-ins which were disclosed in April in testimony before a federal inquiry into RCMP activities.

Gardom has asked deputy Attorney-General Dick Vogel for a report on the testimony.

Macdonald said it is a mistake to put the investigation in the hands of Vogel who has already made statements on the subject.

"The least he could do is appoint independent counsel to hold the investigation rather than giving it to a busy deputy," he said.

Macdonald said he is convinced the government does not know where the break-ins occurred or who the victims were, and that this should also be looked at by the independent inquiry.

Weather Blamed

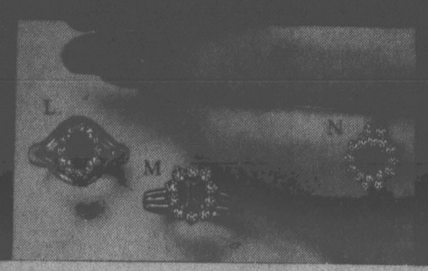

Economic Development Minister Don Phillips blamed bad weather in eastern Canada last year for the current shortage of boxcars on the B.C. Railway.

Boxcars that normally would have moved west were sidetracked in eastern freightyards because of the weather, he suggested.

Phillips made the statement after being asked by Norm Levi (NDP—Vancouver Burrard) if the shortage of railcars was the result of the Social Credit government's decision to close the BCR's railcar manufacturing plant at Squamish last year.

"We have had several firms from around the world look at Railwest, looking into the economics and the feasibility of building boxcars there, and all these firms have found that it is not economical to do so," Phillips said.

Insulting Session

Debate in the legislature became a high-spirited exchange of insults Monday night as the house spent a seventh day on budget estimates of Premier Bill Bennett's office.

Economic Development Minister Don Phillips accused the NDP of ruining democracy by lowering the level of debate. The opposition said if the quality of debate was lacking it was becuase of speeches given by Phillips and the Social Credit government's refusal to be accountable.

Phillips made his charge in defence of Bennett, who was the subject earlier in the day of an opposition non-confidence motion to reduce Bennett's ministerial salary to $3. The debate on the motion will continue today.

The economic development minister, ignoring constant jeering from the opposition during a raucous but good-humored night sitting, called the NDP past masters of smut and smear. He said the opposition's performance in the house put democracy in jeopardy.

NDP house leader Bill King (NDP—Revelstoke-Slocan) said in a later interview that the only thing which would threaten democracy would be stifling of free speech.

Phillips also accused Liberal leader Gordon Gibson of both secretly representing a large coal interest and being in bed with the NDP. Gibson said later it's beyond his understanding how he could be doing both at once.

Shot Time

The agricultural ministry has issued a reminder to horse breeders in the Kamloops-Okanagan-Similkameen area to vaccinate their horses before May 31 to protect them from equine encephalomyelitis. The disease, known as sleeping sickness in humans, is mosquito-borne and therefore is most prevalent during hot humid spells.

DESTRUCTION OF HARBOR FEARED

The Ladysmith harbor is in danger of being irrevocably destroyed and environment officials aren't listening, a group of concerned citizens told Environment Minister Jim Nielsen Tuesday.

But they won a promise from the minister to take a first-hand look at the situation.

Spokesman for the group of 35 residents, Tom Wickham, said it appeared the facts of the over-all pollution of the bay weren't getting through to the minister so they came down to meet him personally.

They said CPR subsidiaries such as Pacific Logging and Ladysmith Log Sorting are endangering all other aspects of the multi-use harbor.

These are oyster beds, salmon feeding grounds and pleasure boating which has led to a devaluation of waterfront property and is affecting residents' quality of life, Wickham said.

But instead of cutting back on booming and sorting, logging companies are applying to expand their operations in the harbor, Wickham said.

Nielsen told the delegation he will look into the problem. He said he feels it can be resolved although there is an "unfortunate over-all atmosphere of distrust" between the two sides.

He called it a typical conflict of resource use where the logging operations have been there for 75 years, but the recreation people feel they aren't getting a fair shake.

business

Brenda Mines

Brenda Mines Ltd., of Peachland, B.C. reported earnings of $2,621,000, or 61 cents a share for the first three months of 1978, compared with $2,211,000, or 52 cents a share in the same period last year.

Revenue was $15,762,000, compared with $14,242,000 in 1977.

"The increase in profit was due to the higher prices for molybdenum," a company spokesman said.

Bethlehem

Bethlehem Copper Corp. reported earnings for the first quarter of 1978 of $376,000 or six cents a share, compared with $627,000 or 10 cents a share for the same period in 1977.

Revenue decreased to $4.8 million from $12.3 million the previous year.

Bryan J. Reynolds, company president, said in a news release that despite low copper prices and weather difficulties, mining operations were being conducted at a profit.

Island Tel

Island Telephone Co. Ltd. had earnings per common share of $1.74 in 1977, up from $1.61 in 1976, the company's annual report says.

Dividends per common share were $1.04, up from 92 cents in 1976.

Island Telephone, a subsidiary of Maritime Telegraph and Telephone Co. Ltd., is the telephone utility in Prince Edward Island.

A 5.7 per cent increase in telephone bills and a 9.2 per cent increase in long-distance rates enabled the company to increase its operating revenues to $14.2 million in 1977 from $11.4 million in 1976.

The company had record-high capital expenditures of $8.9 million in 1977, part of which it financed by selling 200,000 shares of common stock at $14 a share, $1.2 million of preference shares and $2.5 million in bonds. It has planned $7.45 million in capital expenditures for 1978.

Cornat Ind.

Cornat Industries Ltd. had net earnings of $2,268,000 or 43 cents a share in the three months ended March 31, up from $1,579,000 or 30 cents a share in the first three months of 1977.

Meanwhile, earnings of Versatile Manufacturing Ltd., of Winnipeg, Cornat's farm equipment subsidiary dropped to $2,102,000 or 71 cents a share, from $4,083,000 or $1.37 a share in the first quarter of 1977. Sales were slightly higher at $33.9 million versus $33.7 million.

Paul M. Soubry, Versatile's chief executive officer, said profit margins continue to be adversely affected by higher operating costs attributable to interest expense and future financing charges.

Shell Canada

C. William Daniel, president of Shell Canada Ltd., said the federal target of producing one million barrels a day from Western Canada's oil sands and heavy oil deposits by 1990 is desirable but not achievable.

Daniel told the annual meeting of shareholders "the best that could be achieved realistically in this time frame, given optimal phasing of projects, is about 700,000 barrels a day."

He said the magnitude of effort involved for the federal target "requires far more urgency in negotiating terms than now is apparent."

Daniel also said that surplus natural gas supplies can be maintained for more than a decade if industry cash reserves can sustain the current high level of exploration.

He said Shell's profit rise is being slowed by heavy investments, a lull in natural gas markets and depressed oil earnings.

As a result, he said 1978 earnings are unlikely to exceed 1977 profits.

Shell had earnings last year of $154.6 million, an increase of 14 per cent from 1976. Earlier, it reported first quarter earnings of $36.4 million compared with $38.8 million for the same quarter in 1977.

Ryan Lays Scolding On Fellow Aldermen

Two Victoria aldermen had their wrists slapped by a fellow alderman Tuesday for being inconsiderate of senior city hall staff.

During a special council meeting Ald. Larry Ryan criticized aldermen Murray Glazier and Bill McElroy for recent statements that Ryan said caused discomfort for the officials.

Without naming names but without leaving any doubt about who he was referring to, Ryan criticized Glazier for telling the press he'd been misinformed by city staff when analysing a new piece of provincial legislation.

Ryan was referring to the fact that Glazier had implied that city staff should have taken the blame when he mis-read the bill.

Glazier was attacked subsequently by three provincial cabinet ministers for making incorrect public statements. He later apologized to the ministers.

Glazier also asked for an apology from the city staff member who he claimed had mis-guided him on the matter.

"No question about it, I made a mistake and I have apologized profusely," Glazier told Ryan.

But Glazier said the press had jumped on his comments about the role of city staff in analysing the bill "and a number of people placed the worst possible construction on it."

Ryan also went after McElroy, again without dropping names, saying that a certain alderman had made comments during a television interview that upset many city hall staffers.

Ryan, who is chairman of the personnel committee, said the alderman had indicated a senior staff position might soon be eliminated.

Ryan said although he hadn't seen the broadcast he understood McElroy had discussed the possibility of the city saving money by eliminating the position of personnel manager.

McElroy said, however, that Ryan had got his wires crossed on the matter.

He said that he, McElroy, had really said the city could save money by getting rid of Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association head Carl Anshelm, and hiring a personnel officer to handle contract negotiations.

McElroy said he couldn't remember ever saying anything like Ryan alleged.

Ryan said he wasn't positive what had been said on the news program in question, but city staff had been upset about it, and that's why he raised the matter.

Afghanistan Recognized

PEKING (Reuter) — China has recognized the new government of Afghanistan, the New China News Agency announced Monday. The news agency said a note of recognition has been delivered to Afghan ambassador Yasin Azim.

Dial 911: Does It Really Work?

The Greater Victoria Intermunicipal Committee just wants to know two things before it makes a decision on whether to recommend an emergency dialling system for the area — how much will it cost, and is the system working in Vancouver?

City officials were instructed to get the answers to those two points after the committee discussed a request by a Victoria woman to consider adopting 911 as the number to be dialled by citizens faced with an emergency.

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier told the committee that when a similar proposal had been discussed two years ago it was dropped when B.C. Tel told them what the bill would be.

"I think they said something over $1 million," said Couvelier.

He added, however, that the company had said the cost of the system would drop as Victoria's telephone network became more automated.

Assistant city manager Colin Crisp said he wasn't sure what the price would be today but, "It's still going to be very expensive — no matter how the cake is cut."

Buy-at-Home Campaign Urged on Commissioner

Greater Victoria Economic Development Commissioner Barry Mayhew was asked by the intermuncipal committee Tuesday to find out what can be done to encourage local residents to "buy home-grown."

The committee's directive rose out of a request by Esquimalt Ald. Colin Blair that Mayhew's office find out if local bakeries will pick up the slack left by the impending shutdown of McDonald's bakery.

Blair said Mayhew's job should not only be to attract new businesses to the area but also to help protect the business that are already established here.

He said that smaller local bakeries could find themselves squeezed out of the market by larger out-of-town operations.

Blair said that there were numerous large government facilities in the region, such as cafeterias, hospitals and ferries, that could provide tremendous markets for local bakeries.

"It's time we took off the kid gloves," said Blair. "I'd like to see some effort made to see that local bakeries can secure these contracts."

Saanich Ald. Ian Cass later persuaded Blair to enlarge the scope of the motion, so that Mayhew would be instructed to see what could be done to encourage the consumption of locally-produced goods.

Cass said bakeries aren't the only businesses facing stiff competition from out-of-town companies.

Earlier in the meeting Mayhew had told the committee he is happy with the progress his office has made since it was established in December.

He said the Economic Development Commission now has a presence in the city and is getting a high volume of calls and visits from businessmen.

He said that recently the commission helped an insulation operation get into business in the area and that nine new jobs will eventually be created by the company.

Mayhew said that there is an 80 per cent chance that an industrial chemicals company that would hire 20-25 employees might soon set up shop here.

He also said an American company, Data Communications Inc., is holding talks that could lead to the establishment of an office here. The operation would have 30-35 full-time positions.

COLLISION KILLS MAN

NANAIMO (CP) — Jack Hunter, 22, of Regina, was killed Tuesday when his car collided with the rear of another car driven by his brother, left the road and struck a power pole on Highway 19, about 10 kilometres north of here.

Vernon James Hunter, 29, also of Regina, escaped injury when his car left the road and landed on CP Rail line. RCMP are investigating the accident.

Chokehold Only Way — RCMP

VANCOUVER (CP) — Resistance on the part of drug trafficking suspects can result in "violent encounters" with police attempting to seize drugs, a British Columbia Supreme Court suit against four policemen was told Tuesday.

Staff Sergeant Harold Almrud, a highly experienced RCMP drug squad officer, said police must meet resistance "with sufficient force to subdue the suspect and prevent him from disposing of the drug by swallowing . . . throwing it away, or flushing it down a toilet."

The damages suit against RCMP constables Hugh Stewart, David Moll and Gary Kirkpatrick, and city police detective John Edwards, was filed by Gerald Schuck and his wife Sharon, of Surrey, who seek compensation for alleged false arrest and assault in an incident last July 17.

The Schucks say they were manhandled without justification, handcuffed, searched for drugs and in the end released when no drugs were found. The husband was grabbed in a neck choke-hold, the wife by the wrists.

The officers say they were acting on a radio description of a woman seen making a drug purchase in a downtown cafe, say they trailed her from the cafe to the drive-in and that the clothing and general appearance of Mrs. Schuck matched the description radioed to them by a police spotter using binoculars on the cafe.

Police witnesses said they have been forced into using surprise and the instant chokehold on drug suspects because addicts and pushers transport their drugs in the mouth and swallow it when pounced on by police.

"This can be a violent business" not only for the suspects but also for police.

When police surprise a suspect and choke him to prevent swallowing, could this be accomplished in some other way, asked federal department of justice lawyer George Carruthers.

"There is no other way" and it often results "in a fight to the end," said Almrud. "I tell them to open their mouths. If they refuse, they will fight until it ends either in us recovering the drugs or them swallowing it."

Edwards said he went to the passenger's side of the car where Mrs. Schuck was sitting. He suddenly flung open the car door, reached in and grabbed her by the wrists calling "Police, drug search," he said.

"She jumped. There was no doubt she was scared," he said. "I told her to get out and she did so by herself. She stepped out."

Edwards said he handcuffed her, searched her coat pockets and later had her take off her coat to examine her arms for needle marks. He said he showed her his police badge.

No needle marks, nor drugs, nor any sign of them was found.

The hearing was adjourned until May 30.

Kamloops Loses In Sewage Case

KAMLOOPS (CP) — The provincial pollution control branch has rejected an application by the city to increase its sewage discharge into the Thompson River to seven million gallons a day from 3.5 million gallons.

The branch also ordered the city to reduce the total phosphorous content of its waste during the months of Jan., Feb. and March.

In a letter to the city's engineering department Friday, the branch said it rejected the application because the city had not adequately investigated other alternatives to direct river discharge.

It also said direct discharge might not be a good waste management practice because valuable nutrients in the sewage are not being used.

A city spokesman said the rejection came as no surpise because Penticton was recently told to abandon lake discharge and to consider land disposal.

He also said the current practice of removing phosphorous has been recognized as an interim method until the city fully develops a sewage discharge system.

FRAUD CHARGES LAID

VANCOUVER (CP) — RCMP said Tuesday that Lionel Foley has been charged with one count of fraud attempt and nine counts of fraud, four of them shared with George LeMarquand, over 10 real estate deals in the Vancouver area since May, 1974.

The charges stemmed from a two-year investigation of private home sales in which nine people were victims.

Foley and LeMarquand were mentioned in a British Columbia Supreme Court ruling last February involving the foreclosure by a finance company on a home owned by a Surrey widow. She had sold her home for $72,500, agreeing to carry a mortgage for the buyer who was sent by Foley and LeMarquand.

The buyer performed the conveyance of the property without registering the mortgage, borrowed money against the house and left the mortgage holder with the bill.

Justice Thomas Berger postponed the foreclosure for a year.

Dumping Charges

VANCOUVER (CP) — A contracting firm and a Musqueam Indian band leader were charged Monday with illegal dumping in a Sea Island marsh inhabited by salmon, trout and waterfowl. Southwest Contracting Ltd. of Burnaby and Robert Joseph Guerin face six counts each laid under the federal fisheries act.

PHOTOGRAPHS SENT TO WITNESSES

VANCOUVER (CP) — Seized newspaper photographs depicting fishermen's union members at a 1976 anti-combines inquiry were sent to witnesses now testifying at a trial of seven fishermen charged with unlawfully impeding the inquiry, combines investigation officer Simon Wapniarski has testified.

Wapniarski said Monday that the pictures were sent to all Crown witnesses in the case except for a television reporter and cameraman.

The pictures, photocopies of prints made from negatives seized during a Combines Investigation Commission search of Vancouver Sun newsroom Jan. 11, 1977, were entered as evidence at the trial.

Pacific Press Ltd., which produces the evening Sun and morning Province, took the case of the seized negatives and other materials to British Columbia Supreme Court, and on June 28, 1977, Chief Justice Nathan Nemetz ruled that the search warrants issued against the Sun and Province allowing the investigators to take the materials were an abuse of the process of the court. The warrants were quashed.

Testifying under cross-examination by defence counsel Harry Rankin, Wapniarski said he wrote the names of the people depicted in the photographs on them before sending them to the witnesses.

The trial continues.

Tear Gas Robbery Loot Found

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police have recovered a mail bag and most of its contents taken in a robbery by a water-pistol wielding man who shot tear gas into the faces of two Royal Bank messengers.

Police said Tuesday about $150 in foreign currency was missing but most of the packages — containing stocks, bonds and travellers cheques — were still in the mailbag when it was found downtown.

The two messengers were treated at hospital for eye irritation and discharged following the Friday morning holdup.

U.S. fisheries agreement would basically extend 1977 reciprocal fishing rights while negotiators continue efforts to reach a definitive long-term treaty. The proposed 1978 agreement, however, provided for a major change at Canadian insistence, allowing Canadian trollers to operate further south on the U.S. West Coast.

Canada maintained that the concession was necessary to balance the harm done to Canadian fishermen when a U.S. court decision in effect took salmon from offshore fishermen to boost the salmon allowed to inshore U.S. Indian fishermen.

U.S. West-Coast fishermen have been fighting the proposed extension and recently obtained a court injunction, to take effect next week, barring Canadian salmon trollers from U.S. waters.

Scott Stafne, counsel for the Washington State Trollers Association, said his group has agreed to drop that court case, voiding the injunction, in exchange for a promise that the Canadians would get nothing more than they had in 1977 unless Magnuson and his counterpart on the House merchant marine committee are consulted.

The consultation, he said, will be enough to ensure that the concerns of Washington fishermen are considered

Eric Gives Himself Tough Act to Follow

Surely nothing could be more unlikely than a pudgy musical comedy singer who likes to cook — and to eat — running the famed Boston Marathon.

But Eric Roberts, a printer at Victoria Press and an entertainer known for his nightclub act and his roles in such shows as South Pacific, Guys and Dolls and Oklahoma, did it. And at the age of 41.

How he did it — completing the gruelling test of 26 miles, 385 yards after taking up running less than a year ago — is incredible. Why he did it is even more baffling. I don't think even he knows.

But he does know that, even for a recent convert to running, the Boston is the ultimate.

"It's the World Series of marathons," Eric says with reverence. "It's where everyone who can afford it goes. Just to run in the Boston . . . is like going to Mecca."

Gone now is the excrutiating pain, the memory of not being able to walk for two days afterwards and of struggling, legs sweating profusely, through every trip down a few stairs. It was, says Eric, all worth it. And now he has something to cherish. Something he'll be able to tell his grandchildren.

And yet, when Eric Roberts took up running late last May nothing was further from his mind than the dream of running a marathon.

He found he was too much involved with people who wanted to drink, dance and smoke. So he joined the Y.

At 40, he weighed in at 157 pounds and admits that at only 5 feet 6½ inches, he looked a little roly poly. (Eric has trimmed that to 145 pounds but would like to get down to around 130. His love of food is the problem.)

"The first time I went for a two-mile run I ran a mile, had to walk the last mile and couldn't walk for two days afterwards. I was so stiff," he says with a grin.

"But I stuck with it. I decided life begins at 40 and I wanted to do something that wasn't a gift. My nightclub work is a gift and I needed to find something else I could do. I had played a little fun soccer but had never been the athletic type."

Within a month, Eric was running with the leaders and was often out with friends who ran five or six miles at a time.

He got a lot of advice and help from marathoner Bruce (Gunner) Shaw, who also works at Victoria Press, and last November decided to go to Vancouver with some other runners competing in the annual Seawall Race.

Eric's brother Darrell, a Vancouver lawyer and a mile champ in his school days, was running in the 6-mile Seawall for his fourth time. When he saw the still-pudgy Eric in the lineup he couldn't believe it.

"Eric, running?" said Darrell. "He never ran anywhere before."

"But I did run and in that race I placed 450th out of 1,450 runners and I was pleased," Eric says.

Still, there was no idea of a marathon in his mind.

"Then on the Thursday before Christmas I was out with the Y group and they were dragging their heels a bit," he explains. "So I took off by myself for a five-mile run.

"I felt good, though, so I kept going and I ended up doing 16 miles. I thought boy, if I can do that and work on it, one day I can run a marathon."

Eric decided to combine a visit to a friend in Boston with a run in the race but his letter of application for one of the registered 4,700 starting berths was rejected.

"But they kept my $3 entry fee and I said damn it, you've kept my money, I'm going to run."

And run he did.

On Monday, April 17, there was Eric, somewhere near the back with the 2,000 or so unofficial runners, who were the last to get away.

"There were so many people that the leaders were a mile or more on their journey before we got to where they had started from," he says.

Boasting the Victoria Y crest and sporting his own home-made number R2 D2 on his chest, Eric attracted a lot of attention from the million or more fans who lined the route. It was those fans, in fact, who kept him from quitting when he started to feel the pain.

"The most I'd ever run in practice was 18 miles and even then I was sick from running too hard and from not eating the right food," he explains. "I tell you if you want to run a marathon, you've got to be able to stand pain. I never knew what pain was until then. The last five miles of the Boston brought the most excrutiating pain I've ever known. From the waist down everything is crying 'Stop! Stop!'

"And yet the people along the way were so warm and responsive they wouldn't let you quit. They'd say 'R2 D2, Way to Go!'

"When you struggle to the 21-mile mark, a policeman with a bullhorn says 'Congratulations, you've just reached the top of Heartbreak Hill. It's all downhill from here.'

"But you run into a wall in those last five miles. Your conditioning has all gone and you're running on guts alone.

"Still, the people won't let you stop. They do anything to keep you going. For the last two miles they call out 'One mile to go!' and when there are six blocks left they scream 'Only three blocks to go!'

"The fans look for the guy who's going to win but after that they seem to prefer to cheer on the inexperienced runner, the guy who is maybe doing something for the first time."

With the finish line at last in sight, horror struck Eric Roberts. He was having difficulty running.

"I was going to finish, I knew, but I kept saying quietly 'Please Lord, don't let it be the worst of all things — walking across the line.'

Then, with a burst of strength, he completed the course in the unofficial time of three hours, 35 minutes and 16 seconds.

Eric lay exhausted on the ground. His feet were high in the air, still going round. After 26 miles he couldn't stop them. It may seem crazy but he knew then he'd have to do it again (he plans to run in the Seattle Marathon this November) to prove it wasn't all a dream.

The ecstasy of it didn't hit him until the next day when he felt a great surge of pride and relived that thrilling moment when he ran across the finish line.

Naval Officer Charged

A 29-year-old officer from CFB Esquimalt, the brother of two men who have admitted the armed holdup of HMCS Terra Nova, is facing a court martial as a result of an investigation into financial matters aboard HMCS Mackenzie.

Facing charges is Capt. William J.E. Fredericks, 979 Thomas.

The nature of the charges won't be known until the court martial begins May 17.

Fredericks' two brothers, Lloyd, 48, and Frank, 45, have been remanded in custody until May 16 for pre-sentence reports and sentencing.

They pleaded guilty April 27 in Victoria county court to confining Lieut. Peter McIntyre and his wife Candice; to using a firearm while committing a $19,000 robbery; and to stealing money from McIntyre while armed with an offensive weapon.

The court was told the two brothers, who were partly disguised and carried a pistol and a sawed-off shotgun, forced their way into the McIntyre's home at 719 Connaught on the night of Jan. 14.

They bound and gagged Mrs. McIntrye leaving her with Frank while Lloyd took her husband, Terra Nova's logistics officer in charge of payroll, to the ship where McIntrye was forced to open the safe and fill a briefcase with money.

The abductor and his victim then returned to the McIntyre home where McIntyre was also bound and gagged before the two men left.

The McIntyres worked themselves free and then drove to the Esquimalt police station.

Lettuce Cost Shows Drop

Prices for head lettuce were lopped 40-70 cents this week compared with early May as better conditions in California fields permit harvesting.

Typical retail price today was 79 cents a head vs. $1.19-$1.49 last week.

Part of the reason for falling prices is buyer resistance encountered in the eastern market for California lettuce whose scarcity was blamed on flooding at planting time in November and heavy rains during the growing season since then.

Large heads were wholesaling around 59 cents and small ones about 39 cents.

Produce spokesmen hoped the weather had stabilized in California, but there was no assurance that supplies would remain adequate. Local head lettuce will not come on market until about the second week of June as crops mature in the Fraser Valley.

A Victoria supermarket 10 days ago posted lettuce at the unheard of price of $1.65, but got few takers.

Restaurants and hotels were about the only regular customers, forced to continue offering salad with meals and green garnish on hamburgers.

Final Warning Going Out To Businesses

One final warning notice will be sent to 112 firms owing Saanich $35,283 in unpaid 1978 business tax, which became due April 30.

If the bills aren't settled by the deadline set by the municipal solicitor, legal action should be started against the businesses involved, the finance committee agreed Tuesday night.

The Saanich rate for business tax is five per cent of the gross rental value of the premises. Accounts unpaid by May 1 each year have a five per cent penalty added.

'SHOULD HAVE DRESSED AS NUN'

All That Cleavage Stuns Mayor

MARYMOON
. . . 'incredible'

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier voted against funding the Victoria Rape Relief Centre Tuesday saying he was disturbed by what he felt was a low-cut blouse worn by a centre representative.

After the meeting Couvelier told reporters: "Did you see her blouse for God's sake! The thing was down to here," he said gesturing to his midriff.

"Maybe I'm just old fashioned," he added. "Nobody else seemed to notice it. Maybe I'm just a dirty old man."

Couvelier voted against the awarding of any funds to the group because he was disturbed by the idea of "some woman in a low-slung blouse" giving a lecture to male high school students on the topic of rape.

He said he had to question the operation because of the neck-line of a belted jacket worn by Rape Relief representative Trisha MaryMoon.

And she added that the over-all postion taken by local government to the centre's requests for grants is also intolerable.

"They're giving us such ridiculous reasons for turning us down . . . it seems totally incredible to me that that kind of thing (Couvelier's statements) could have been said at a committee meeting in the first place, but then for him to repeat it to reporters later is ridiculous," said MaryMoon.

MaryMoon appeared before the committee in an unsuccesful bid to reverse an earlier decision by the inter-municipal grants committee not to fund the centre to the tune of $16,000.

During debate of the application, and after MaryMoon had left the committee room, Couvelier said he wasn't sure that the centre was operating in an acceptable manner.

Couvelier was upset at the fact that Rape Relief Centre staff spend some of their time in Greater Victoria schools lecturing both male and female students on the dangers of rape.

"I'm not even sure they're going about this the right way . . . talking to boys about it," said Couvelier.

"I'm not sure I'd want somebody wearing a low-slung blouse standing up in front of a bunch of grade 12 . . . it's contradictory."

When asked if he objects to a woman talking to boys on the subject of rape, he made it clear he'd been upset by MaryMoon's style of dress.

MaryMoon said that she couldn't believe Couvelier's complaint about her style of dress.

She wore a loose fitting belted jacked that was open at the neck.

"He seems to have a lot of fantasies," she said. "I just don't know where he's coming from."

She said Couvelier seemed to think that no woman who doesn't look like a nun has the right to talk about women and rape and that any woman that isn't covered from head-to-foot is suspect.

MaryMoon said if she'd known what Couvelier was like she'd have dressed in a nun's habit and would have said prayers before addressing the committee.

"Maybe then they'd have listened to me."

The committee turned down the request for funding, adopting a motion by Couvelier that no action be taken on the grant application.

Jaycees Promise Surprises At Fair Opening on Friday

"The Jaycee Fair is going to be different this year — and hopefully better," exhibition director Dave Trace said today.

"We were determined to change everything."

For one thing, the fair, which starts at 4 p.m. Friday, will run nine days instead of six and will draw 100,000 people, Trace said, up from last year's total of 64,000.

"They are a Canadian company and all their rides are new. They are putting the rides up today. They have more rides than we have space for so we are not certain of all the things we can offer but for sure there will be the Skydiver, which will be the feature of the fair."

The Skydiver is a bucket ride carrying passengers 80 feet in the air, or about 40 feet higher than a large Ferris Wheel. From the top, anyone brave enough to go up will be able to look down about 30 or 40 feet to the roof of the Memorial Arena.

"The Skydiver will be visible from the Town and Country shopping centre, possibly from as far away as Royal Oak."

Adding to its height will be the fact it will be atop Crocus Hill, the area behind the arena known as the rock.

"We decided to call it Crocus Hill because there isn't a single crocus on it," Trace said, "and, anyway, it should be called something besides the rock."

Also on the hill, if space permits, will be a children's train ride. The children's midway will be centred on the hill.

This means the agricultural display, which used to be atop the rock, will go behind the curling rink where the kiddie midway was.

The stage show debuts at 8 p.m. Friday after opening ceremonies. Headliner Friday, Saturday and Sunday is Anson Williams, Potsy from the Happy Days TV show. He is a singer and dancer. Show times Saturday and Sunday are 4 p.m. and 8 p.m.

Headliner Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday is Danny and the Juniors, a 1950s nostalgia group famous for Let's Go to the Hop. They are backed by a hula hoop act and other things related to the 1950s. Show times are 8 p.m. only.

Final headliner is the Spurrlows, a Las Vegas show band of about 15 members.

Show times next week are 8 p.m. both Thursday and Friday and 4 p.m. and 8 p.m. on Saturday, May 20, the last day.

Trace said the $2 admission fee for adults goes almost entirely to pay for the entertainment. Cost for students is $1 and children six to 13 is 75 cents. Under six and pensioners are free at all times.

There will be two shows daily of Peter Ralston and the puppets.

Monday from 12:30 p.m. to 2 p.m. will be handicapped children's day and will be closed to the public. The youngsters will get free rides and free hot dogs and pop, courtesy of the Jaycees.

TINY SEEDLING will become a mighty fir tree some day, 10-year-old Scott Roger, a junior forest ranger from the Colwood-Langford station, explains to Lisa Codd, 6, of Salt Spring Island. Lisa doesn't seem too impressed but she might have been a bit camera-shy. This is National Forest Week and there is a display at Hillside Mall.

SWEEP MAPLE LEAFS FOUR STRAIGHT

Canadiens In a Breeze

TORONTO (CP) — Toron to coach Roger Neilson accepted the elimination of his Maple Leafs from further Stanley Cup competition with reluctant resignation.

"Nobody likes to lose," Neilson said after Montreal Canadiens advanced to a record 25th National Hockey League final appearance with a 2-0 win Tuesday night and 4-0 sweep of their best-of-seven semi-final.

"But if you have to, I'd rather lose to a great team like the Canadiens. They're well-balanced and extremely well-coached.

"I can't see anyone beating them—this year anyway."

The mighty Canadiens had no trouble with an inferior Leafs' club, as goaltender Ken Dryden turned aside 23 shots—none of them difficult—to record his 10th career playoff shutout in 90 appearances.

Jacques Lemaire, at 7:21 of the opening period, and Steve Shutt, with his sixth of the playoffs at 2:15 of the second, provided the Montreal firepower while their sharp defensive corps shut down a weak Toronto attack.

The Canadiens owned the puck for most of the game.

The Leafs, who improved in almost every offensive and defensive category this year, never really were close in any of the four semi-final games. It appeared they used up most of their energy in beating New York Islanders in an extremely physical quarter-final series that stretched the full seven games.

"The Islanders said that was the toughest series they had ever been involved in," Neilson said. "Our players wouldn't say it, but I'm sure they agreed."

Montreal now has to sit back and wait for its opponent in the final, which at this point, looks like Boston Bruins.

The Canadiens met the Bruins in the final last year and swept that series in four straight games. In the 1976-77 playoffs, Montreal lost only two games to New York Islanders in their successful quest for a second consecutive Stanley Cup.

As Neilson said, the Canadiens appear to be a shoo-in for their third consecutive championship season, a feat accomplished only three times before. Toronto turned the trick twice, from 1947-49 and 1962-64, while Montreal won the Cup five straight years from 1956-60.

Going back to 1976, Montreal has appeared in 36 playoff games, winning 32 of them.

Both teams had good scoring opportunities during the opening minutes, and Lemaire finally put Montreal up 1-0 when he connected on a breakaway.

Shutt finished off the scoring early in the second period with a power-play goal.

Has Home Arena Wrecked Flyers?

BOBBY SCHMAUTZ
. . . fires two goals

PHILADELPHIA (CP) — Boston Bruins are in a commanding position in their best-of-seven National Hockey League semi-final series against Philadelphia and the Flyers may well have been done in by their own rink.

The ice surface at the Spectrum, criticized by both teams after the third game Sunday night, was in even worse shape Tuesday night when Boston defeated Philadelphia 4-2 to take a 3-1 lead in the series.

"The ice was worse tonight," said Bobby Schmautz who scored two goals, including one into an empty net in the final minutes, to lead the Bruins to their triumph.

"Outside ice right now would be better."

Philadelphia coach Fred Shero, who complained about the conditions Sunday night, was still upset that the conditions were as bad as they were.

"I don't know what the problem is. We spent a lot of money trying to find out what's wrong. You can't blame the Spectrum, they are trying.

"It's so bad now we don't want to practise here. Everybody runs into the same problem at times in all buildings.

"It's a shame that when you have playoff hockey that conditions are such as that, especially in an indoor sport where you should be able to control the elements."

The Bruins, who could advance to the best-of-seven final against Montreal Canadiens with a victory Thursday night, jumped into a 2-0 edge in the opening period with Schmautz beating Bernie Parent with a shot from the top of the right wing circle near the boards.

"Ratty (Jean Ratelle) gave me the pass and I was in the clear and I didn't think a defenceman was near me," said Schmautz while describing the opening goal. "The puck hopped off my stick and landed a couple of feet over to my right.

"It sat right back down and I just slapped it and closed my eyes and said three "Hail Mary's—and I'm not even Catholic—the next thing I heard clunk.

"I don't know how it went in. I do know it was on the ice."

Don Marcotte added another goal for the Bruins before the period ended and then Wayne Cashman put the Bruins ahead 3-0 at 13:57 of the second period before Jimmy Watson got the Flyers back in the game with his first goal of the playoffs late in the period.

Orest Kindrachuk cut Boston's lead to one goal on a power play at 6:34 of the final period, but the Flyers could not tie it and Schmautz put the game away with his empty-net goal in the dying seconds.

CHINESE DAZZLE GYMNASTICS FANS

HALIFAX (CP) — The gymnastics team from the Peoples Republic of China drew a standing ovation from 3,000 fans here Tuesday night after presenting a two-hour display.

"Spectacular is probably the best way to describe it," said Lee Mabey, development co-ordinator for the Nova Scotia Gymnastic Association.

"They showed some moves Canadians have never seen before. They compare favorably with our top gymnasts and I think they'll do really well in the Pacific Rim championships at Vancouver and Edmonton."

The four-nation competition, including Canada, the U.S. and Australia, starts at Edmonton Sunday and concludes next Wednesday at Vancouver.

Kui was given a standing ovation for a tumbling display at an incredibly fast speed while Peng executed a triple somersault from the high bar.

The Chinese gymnasts were to visit Moncton, N.B., today before travelling to Montreal, Toronto, Sudbury, Ont., Winnipeg, Edmonton and Vancouver.

Dionne Optimistic . . . . . . About Future

Canada Gains Respect

PRAGUE (CP) — Team Canada is all but mathematically eliminated from contention for a gold medal at the world hockey championship but Marcel Dionne says he is convinced it was the right decision to go with young players.

"If we go with the same experienced guys we're not going to learn anything. It has been a step forward this year. We've gained a lot of respect from the people here.

"I feel that in a couple of years, if we continue the way we are, Canada will be dominant again in international hockey."

The 26-year-old Los Angeles Kings centre who is Team Canada's captain, says he realizes that scheduling the world championship while the National Hockey League playoffs are on means Canada will never be represented by all of its best players.

But he also feels this year's team is only two or three players away from being a contender for first place.

Of the six defencemen here, Brad Maxwell of Minnesota North Stars and Bob Picard of Washington Capitals are 20, Rick Hampton of Cleveland Barons and David Shand of Atlanta Flames are 21, Pat Ribble of Atlanta is 24 and Dennis Kearns of Vancouver Canucks 32.

They played some good hockey in Canada's tough 4-2 loss to the Soviet Union but their problems in getting the puck out of their own zone hurt the club in its 5-0 loss to Czechoslovakia.

The Canadians have a 4-3 record, the same as Sweden, but hold third place because they defeated the Swedes 7-5 in their only meeting.

They met the Russians again this morning as play opened in the medal round-robin. After outplaying the Soviet team for almost 55 minutes before losing their 2-1 lead on a couple of mental lapses, there was some optimism that they would be able to win this one.

But Dionne emphasized before the game that it could go either way. "It's easy for young guys to collapse.

"After all, the Russians are super hockey players. And their goalkeeper (Vladislav Tretiak) always plays well against us because he is the only European whose style is like the Canadians. He comes out to challenge the shooters instead of staying back in the net."

Czechoslovakia and Sweden are scheduled to play after the Russia-Canada game.

On Tuesday, the Group "B" teams played two tie games. Finland and West Germany finished 4-4 while the U.S. rallied to tie East Germany, 5-5.

Macs Win And Lose

Victoria McDonalds won one and lost one in the Western Canada Major Junior "A" Lacrosse League Tuesday.

The win came on the floor at Esquimalt Sports Centre, a 17-12 decision over New Westminster Salmonbellies; the defeat, in committee, as league referee-in-chief Reg Higgins tossed out McDonalds' protest of an 11-10 loss to Burnaby Cablevision Sunday.

McDonalds had protested that a faceoff should have been held rather than Burnaby being awarded the ball after two delay-of-game penalties against McDonalds. On each occasion Burnaby scored a goal.

However, on the floor was where the action was and McDonalds, after a slow start, closed fast to overtake the Salmonbellies and move into a first-place tie with Burnaby and New Westminster, each with four points.

Defending-champion Burnaby is undefeated while Salmonbellies have lost two and McDonalds' one.

As he was in the opener a week ago, Wayne Reeve was the big gun for the Bakers. Reeve scored five goals, three in the first period and two coming within 18 seconds to bring McDonalds back from a 5-2 deficit.

Captain Doug Angrove followed with his only goal of the game to tie the score at 5-5 before the period's end and it remained nip and tuck until McDonalds managed to pull away in the third period. The Salmonbellies led 10-9 after the second.

Jeff Whitney-Griffiths scored three goals for McDonalds in the third period while goalkeeper Mike Duck turned stingy in the nets to hold off the Salmonbellies.

Duch stopped 21 shots in the final period while allowing only two goals. In all, he stopped 53 drives while Jerry Strand and Leo Parolini of Salmonbellies combined for 39 saves.

Also scoring for McDonalds were Rhys Wickes with three goals, Murray McClaren with two, and Paul Michael, Jim Boyd and Mark Roberts, each with one.

Mark Tuura scored three goals for Salmonbellies. Rob Dalzell and Herb Whitehead each had two while Dean Malcolm, Steve Manning, Brian Cowie, Shawn Cahill and Barry Dennison had singles.

Petes' World Is Brighter

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — The world, from Peterborough Petes' point of view, has turned rightside up since last Saturday night.

The Petes dropped the first game of the double round-robin Memorial Cup major junior hockey championship tournament 5-2 to Trois-Rivieres Draveurs, but bounced back Tuesday night for a 4-0 victory over the same Quebec Major Junior Hockey League club, and a 2-1 won-lost record for first place in the series.

"It was a win we had to have," said Petes goaltender Ken Ellacott, who turned aside 28 shots for the first shutout of the tournament.

The Petes, champions of the Ontario Major Junior League, got goals from Mark Kirton, Bob Attwell, John Olds and Bill Gardner among 33 shots at Jacques Cloutier in the Trois-Rivieres net.

New Westminster Bruins, defending champions from the Western Canada Hockey League, are 1-1 and meet Peterborough tonight in Sault Ste. Marie, the co-host city, before preliminary play winds up here Thursday night with Trois-Rivieres meeting the Bruins.

Marathoners Travel

Bruce Shaw and Mike Creery of Victoria will travel to Ottawa at the weekend as part of the British Columbia team taking part in the third annual National Capital Marathon.

A total of 2,800 entries have already been received for the event, which doubles as a trial for the national team that compete in Commonwealth Games at Edmonton, Aug. 3-12.

Daddy! They Let Me Clean The Stalls

Jim TAYLOR

Stretching between little girls and large horses is a magical invisible rope. It may stretch, but it never, ever breaks.

If you are truly lucky, you may be there when the loop is thrown.

For me it started with a small girl bursting into a kitchen, puffing and dishevelled and dirty beyond belief, the eyes huge with the wonder of it, the words a waterfall:

"Daddy-I-was-at-the-stables. And they let me clean the stalls!"

It was not the last time She'd clean a stall, nor the 100th. Other people's stalls at first, labor in exchange for time on someone's horse — dream time in a ring, magic at a trot. And then, one incredible day, the ecstasy of the first, soaring leap over a one-foot jump.

The work didn't matter. It never does. A little girl who'll have 50 reasons why she shouldn't take 10 minutes to clean her room will spend two hours shovelling hay and manure for the right to climb into a saddle she needs a fencepost to reach, and count herself among God's more fortunate creatures.

"Daddy! They let me clean the stalls. . .!"

Kathy Wedge knows about the magic rope.

It caught her when she was a little girl in Saskatchewan. For the right to ride a farmer's horse she has swamped stables, unloaded manure, sold peanuts, begged rides on other horses worked more hours than she can begin to count.

Now she rides for Canada's Olympic team—giving lessons and schooling other people's horses to earn her keep and the time to do it. Nothing changes. The objectives and costs soar together. When you ride, you scramble.

But you don't mind. The rope tightened a long time ago. . .

"Daddy, could I take riding lessons? I know it costs money, but I'll use my allowance and baby sit, and. . .

There is a picture on the wall, but I don't need it. Every detail is etched on the mind. It was Horse Christmas, as it had been Horse Birthday six months earlier. Parents and relatives had been carefully primed. Each gift was horse-oriented: the jodphurs, the jacket, the hard hat, the riding crop and ("Oooh! Grannie!) the saddle.

She posed in front of the fireplace, a princess set for the hunt. All she needed was the horse. The dream was already in her eyes. . .

At Southlands Riding and Polo Club it is a picturebook day. Starting Friday there'll be 400 riders performing in the 20th annual spring show, but now there are only two horses going through the jumps as Kathy Wedge and Shirley Holls put them through the Gambler's Sweepstakes event for the edification of the mystified media.

The press conference is a try for a breakthrough. The good riders are athletes, they insist, the meet an athletic event, not a social weekend for the idle rich. It's time, they feel, to get their competitions on the sports pages where they belong.

Their image is against them. It costs upward of $200 a month to stable a horse in the city. sometimes you get lucky. The horse Kathy is riding she got for nothing. She found it pulling a stone boat. But to get a good, sound, horse with its basic training behind it can cost $3,000 and more. So they must be rich people out there fooling around. Swells, the lot of 'em. . .

"Daddy, do you suppose. . .is there any way. . .I mean, if I worked. . .could we. . .please?. . .

Her name was Ye Arba Samantha, Sam for short. She was not destined for greatness.

Sam was five, the girl 11. They spent three years teaching each other.

It was 1972. Sam cost us $600, which we couldn't afford. Because we had friends with horses and an extra stall, the board was $75 per month. We could afford that, but barely.

The baby sitting money went to the horse. Odd jobs were hunted down. She packaged the manure she swept from the stalls, and peddled it to friends as fertilizer, 50 cents a bag. We'd tease her, sometimes, that it cost more to put it in the front end than she got for taking it out the back. But she worked — willingly, joyously.

She was not alone. We heard all the stories — the horses gone lame, the scramble for vet fees and show fees, the jumps refused, tragedies big and small.

When Sam spooked at milk cartons — the targets in Pony Club races—the girl cried a little, thought a lot, and hung one from the centre of her stall and left her cowering in corner until she grew used to it. Education is not all found in schools.

We watched them grow together, a tangle of kids and horses bound together by golden, invisible strands.

Some of the girl's friends will be riding at Southlands on the weekend — older now, but the dreams and the love intact.

They are not spoiled, or no more than most. At the level attained by the Kathy Wedges and the Shirley Hills and the Barbara Simpson Kerrs they are athletes, they are competing in a demanding sport.

But I'd have to disagree with those who say they're not rich.

Support Picking Up For A-K Park Proposal

OUTDOORS
stewart lang

Support appears to be snowballing for creation of a park in the Akamina-Kishinena area of southeastern British Columbia.

The newly-formed B.C. Chapter of the National and Provincial Parks Association of Canada is the latest organization to go on record supporting the move. The Chapter made its stand known in a brief to the Environment and Land Use Committee (ELUC) of the provincial government.

The group, in a separate statement, "strongly recommends that proposed salvage logging operations in the Akamina-Kishinena area of the province be rejected and its important wilderness values be preserved and protected with a parks designation.

"In this matter the Chapter fully supports the recent class 'A' provincial park proposal and encourages the responsible minister, Mr. Bawlf, in his continuing efforts to secure parks status for the area."

It makes a good case for what this writer considers would be a logical move on the part of ELUC, which is still actively reviewing the situation.

The area in question bounds both Waterton Lakes National Park, just over the border in Alberta, and Glacier National Park in Montana.

"The adjoining areas of these national parks have been classed as wilderness zones in their master plans, and consequently logging activity and road construction in the Akamina-Kishinena would disrupt this wilderness buffer zone," states the brief.

Listed among the attributes of the Akamina-Kishinena area, which make it particularly suitable for a wilderness park or equivalent designation, are geological features; remote wilderness features; exceptional scenic mountain landscape and wild waters; rare or endangered wildlife, including the Rocky Mountain wolf, Wyoming moose, Missoula mountain goat, grizzly bear and Montana grayling; rare and unique southern intermountain flora; some of the few remaining extensive stands of mature western larch, Engelmann spruce, subalpine fir, whitebark pine and alpine larch; and ancient Indian trails, encampments and other historical features.

The high wilderness recreational potential of the area, formally outlined by the Canada Land Inventory of 1970, has generated several proposals for both national and provincial park status beginning as far back as 1917.

Proposals to make the area an ecological reserve of the International Biological Programme were submitted in 1970 and 1975 and the importance of the wilderness values were further recognized internationally by the UNESCO designation of Glacier Park as part of the Man In the Biosphere Programme. Waterton Lakes Park is presently under consideration for the same designation.

The group explains the salvage logging operation, which has been proposed to remove an infestation of mountain pine beetle, is "irrelevant to the issue and unwarranted for sound silvicultural and ecological management of the area."

"Indeed, the logging is seen as a lever in expanding forestry operations into an area presently under the jurisdiction of the Lands Branch. As the beetle recurs naturally perhaps this strategy is being used to compensate for what has been claimed to be past overcutting by the Forest Service in the Kootenays."

The Chapter continues:

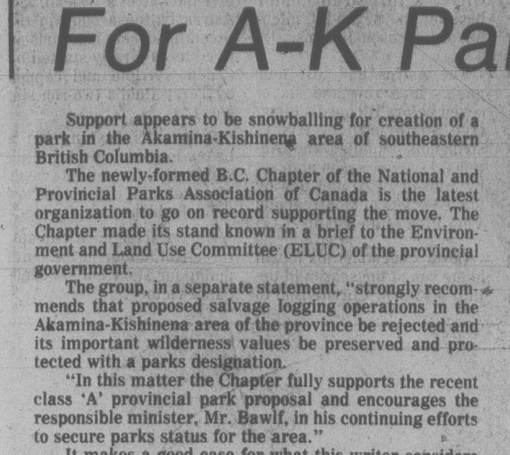

"Members of the B.C. Chapter wonder, as do many concerned residents, why a unique and strategically located natural area that has been proposed for park status many times since 1917 should be finally sacrificed in order to compensate for the shortcomings of poor timber management?

"We wonder why a viable provincial parks proposal should be short-changed by an uneconomic and rushed logging operation?"

Why, indeed, Mr. Bawlf?

Suggestions have been made from some quarters that wildernness proposals closer to home should be solved first. Sure, bones of contention like the Nitinat Triangle and the Tsitika-Schoen should be settled post-haste.

But when you're bucking large multinational corporations and our own development-oriented government, province-wide support is necessary on all the issues.

"I've never heard of Mantovani. You sure you don't mean 'Flunky Monkey and the Fruitcakes'?"

Surprise by Dunsmuir

Claremont and Mt. Douglas are still running one-two in qualifying athletes for the Greater Victoria high school track and field championship finals following further eliminations Tuesday at Centennial Stadium.

Defending-champion Claremont has 58 qualifiers over-all for the finals, which start at 1 p.m. Friday, including 38 in the important "A" section of the meet.

Mt. Douglas has 26 "A" qualifiers and 47 over-all.

Dunsmuir is a surprising third with St. Michael's University School and Victoria also ahead of Esquimalt.

Middle-distance events provided most of the highlights during eliminations Tuesday and promise plenty of close competition during the finals.

Tony Theriault of Esquimalt led a blanket finish in the boys' 1,500-metre event with a time of four minutes, 20.2 seconds. Dave Campbell of Mt. Douglas followed in 4:20.4 and Doug Moffat of Claremont was third in 4:20.6.

In the girls' 1,500, the result was also close with Karen Coutts of Belmont leading in 5:04.1 and Peggy Nelson of Dunsmuir following in 5:04.9.

Claremont athletes led in three events. Lillian DePaoli won the 100-metre hurdles in 16.8, Brian Berger topped the 110-metre hurdles in 17.4 and Tracy Wilkinson won the girls' javelin with a toss of 37.12 metres.

Nancy Canning of Dunsmuir topped the girls' discus with a heave of 32.0 metres. Nick Bennett of Victoria leaped 6.47 metres to win the long jump and Brian Alexander of Mt. Douglas topped the shot put with a toss of 13.12 metres.

Boy! Has Goldman Been On A . . . Trip

I flew back East to Montreal on my traditional buying trip returning home with some super buys. Prices have never looked better and as usual my regular suppliers were most receptive . . . and once again we offer you name brand clothing at savings you'll enjoy. Come in, you'll see . . . Murray

THIS WAS SOME TRIP
THIS IS SOME . . .

THURS., FRI. AND SAT.

Here we go. I managed to pick up 1000 pair of dress slacks (less 300 sold) from a top clothing house who must remain nameless (We won't tell) from flannels and worsteds to beautiful tweeds and definitely all wool. Full top or side pockets, loops or extension waistband, Honest to Goodness $50 value — your price $33.

Am I getting to you? Now we come to sport jackets and oh, how I wish I could mention the maker's name . . . bright and right for Spring from muted checks to plain tweeds, all wool, of course, hanging ever so proudly on our racks (all choked up, aren't you?) and made to sell at $150-$175. We bought them right and your price is $88-$109-$119.

Away we go, and what a buy on sweaters from Italy. It makes my chest swell with pride (don't be jealous, Sophia Loren). Three super styles with intricate detailing and just $13.88, great, eh! (Oh Murray, you're too much).

And now, dear Readers, why don't we all go to blazers. The most versatile piece of clothing in your closet is a blazer, for casual or dress up wear. Our selection is at its best in single and double breasted styles carrying labels from England, Montreal and Duncan (I'm kidding) . . . are you ready for the price? Every blazer at a generous 25% discount (Goldman, you're a benefactor!)

I know you're waiting with bated breath to hear about my suits, so listen. We bought right from a manufacturer we're proud to be associated with.

So help me, regular values from $225 to $295 (and a few at $325) selling at $144, $166 and $188 and when you consider the tailoring, the fabrics and mostly in 3 piece vested styles, take my word for it, this is a bargain, Sir.

And for the big finish — sweaters once again. Not just sweaters, but sweaters sweaters. Mostly imports with labels you'll recognize (come in and read a few). A heaping table full at a whopping 50% off. If that pleases you, come in and buy a sweater to please me . . . have a good day . . . Murray

Ah, school days, and are we ever ready for the Grad. Our sales people speak fluent Algebra . . . import suits by Van Gils of Belgium just received. They're super fashion European styled and shaped vested suits (and that's a mouthful). Arrived to sell at $325 and $250, but your great price — just $188.

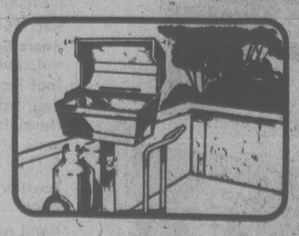

(In view of tremendous values on clothing, alterations extra)

Richard Blows Downs Phillies

By The Associated Press

"For consistency, this was one of my best games this year," said Richard after his four-hitter led the Astros to a 5-1 decision over Philadelphia Phillies.

"I thought I had good stuff in my last game in Montreal but I was not getting the breaking ball over. Tonight I was taking a little bit off the breaking ball and getting it over."

That overpowering performance helped the Houston right-hander record 11 strikeouts, boosting his National League-leading strikeout total to 57.

Elsewhere in the National League, Los Angeles Dodgers defeated St. Louis Cardinals 3-1, Cincinnati Reds beat New York Mets 3-2 in 10 innings, San Francisco Giants beat Pittsburgh Pirates 3-2, Chicago Cubs defeated San Diego Padres 8-5 and Atlanta Braves defeated Montreal Expos 3-2 in the first game of a doubleheader before losing the nightcap 7-6.

In the American League, Toronto Blue Jays rode the five-hit pitching of Tom Underwood to a 4-0 win over Oakland A's, Jim (Catfish) Hunter allowed only one hit in six innings to start New York Yankees on the way to a 3-1 win over Minnesota Twins, Jim Rice's two-run homer in the seventh gave Boston Red Sox a 4-3 victory over Kansas City Royals, Cleveland Indians beat Seattle Mariners 5-4, California Angels defeated Detroit Tigers 7-5, and Texas Rangers defeated Milwaukee Brewers 7-1 with Al Oliver's three-run homer backing the seven-hit pitching of Ferguson Jenkins.

The Astros had lost four games in a row and six of seven before Richard's effective performance. His 11 strikeouts equalled the National League season high set by himself twice and tied by Steve Rogers of Montreal and Vida Blue of the Giants.

Cesar Cedeno hit his fourth home run of the season in the first off Larry Christenson to give the Astros a 1-0 lead. The Astros batted around in the seventh, scoring four runs on five hits in a rally started by Cedeno's triple and capped by Terry Puhl's two-run single.

Brian Asselstine hit a bases-loaded, ninth-inning single to lead Atlanta over Montreal in the opener of their doubleheader.

Day in Jail For Findlay

VANCOUVER (CP) — Greg Findlay, 35, a former all-star with British Columbia Lions of the Canadian Football League, was sentenced in provincial court Tuesday to one day in jail and fined $5,000 for stock fraud.

Judge Arthur Beirnes, in sentencing the former linebacker on theft involving stocks worth nearly $70,000, said he was taking into account the fact that full restitution had been made but that he must ensure the sentence was of sufficient deterrent to others.

Findlay, who pleaded guilty to the charge Feb. 6, was given one year to pay the fine.

Vicettes Pull Shocker

Yeta Dalilla bashed out a home run, a single and a sacrifice to lead Vicettes in the batting department while Sandy Milliken pitched a four-hitter for the shutout.

Skylarks, who play in the Vancouver League and were unbeaten in the Victoria League, threatened in the first inning when Lisa Atkinson led off with a single, Laury Grimston followed with a sacrifice and Crystal Lockyer came up with another single to load the bases.

But Milliken escaped the dilemma by getting Lorna McHattie to fly out and ousting Gale Prince on a grounder.

Vicettes went ahead in bottom of the same frame with two runs on singles by Lori Skinner and Heather Knight, Dalilla's sacrifice and a two-base error.

In the Stuffy McGinnis Men's League, Ken Fox struck out eight batters while pitching a one-hitter to lead Victoria Athletics to a 2-1 decision over Batesons at Central Park.

Terry Strandlund hit a homer in the first inning to give Batesons the lead but Athletics rallied with single runs in the fifth and sixth innings.

Terry Hoy scored the tying run by gaining first on a fielder's choice, stealing second, advancing to third on an error and racing home on a sacrifice by Mike Wallace.

John Hughes scored the winner by tagging a single, advancing to third on two successive errors and coming home on an interference call.

At Heywood Avenue Park, Bill Flynn and Larry Shaw each smashed a homer to lead Hygrade Radio to a 9-2 decision over Taylor House Movers in a Hyewood Men's League game.

New Look for Sandown as Harness Meet Set

By BILL WALKER
Times Staff

It's all set except for the signing of the lease, but harness racing definitely will take place at Sandown Park this summer. And this summer means almost now.

The opening card will be on Saturday, June 3, and there will be a total of 57 days at the Sidney oval for the standardbreds before closing day, Sept.9.

Racing will take place Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays with a post time of 5:30 p.m., and Saturdays and holidays at 1:30 p.m. On the final week, after Labor Day, there will be racing every day except Sunday until the meeting closes on Monday, Sept. 9.

Ten races are planned each day with a maximum of eight entries a race, except for invitationals and, as there won't be any invitationals here in the first year. that takes care of that.

There will be a minimum purse guarantee of $600 per race, which compares with a $900 minimum at Cloverdale and $550 at Orangeville in Ontario. In the first year at Cloverdale in 1976 the minimum was $500.

There are more horses available for racing than stall space is available. There will be about 300 stabled here with 600 available in B.C., the others being stabled on the mainland. They will be shipped over as needed to fill out the cards.

Almost all of the races will be over the one-mile distance with some at shorter, but none at longer. Pacers will be predominant with 14 out of 15 races being for pacers.

At least two of Canada's leading drivers will be here for the meeting. They are Keith Linton, who was the 1976 champion of United States and Canada in the matter of percentage of races won; and Joe Hudon, the 1977 Canadian driving champion, who beat out Ron Waples of Ontario by the slim margin of .006. Just last Sunday Hudon finished fourth in the harness drivers' world championship at Monticello Raceway in New York.

Waples was the first Canadian driver to win more than $1 million in a season in Canada.

Majority of drivers (not jockeys, please) in harness racing are owner-trainer-drivers and there should be about 60 here for the meeting. When drivers are not handling their own entries they "catch-drive" which means driving for someone else.

There will be several improvements to the track, some necessary to conform to regulations and conditions laid down, others for the convenience of the fans, and others for safety and security.

In all, Keeling said it will probably cost $140,000 to get the program rolling here.

"There's nothing cheaper than a can of paint," he said, as painters were busy dressing up the grandstand and foyer area, while other workmen were engaged in other chores.

But that's only a small part of it.

A hub rail has to be installed around the inside rail of the track;

Two towers 65 feet in height are to be installed for video viewing of the races, by order of the federal government, and for the judges;

A 3,000 foot, $14,000 chain-link fence will be installed around the perimeter of the stable area for security;

The top four inches of sand has been taken off the track to firm up the track for the standardbreds, and will have to be replaced before the start of the thoroughbred season ("and we may have to take more off," said Keeling);

Sixteen more stalls are to be provided in the paddock area by order of the B.C. Racing Commission;

And $20,000 will be spent on new totes.

The deal for the Automatic Tote, of Australian design, was completed this week. There will be 59 machines compared to the 49 which were in operation for the thoroughbreds last fall. They will be modern in design and will allow three-way wagering, win, place and show, or exactor betting, which will be available on all races. There will be no daily double or quinella wagering.

There will be three judges, two appointed by the Canadian Trotting Association and one by the B.C. Racing Commission. Racing secretary will be Leary Claypool, who held the same position at Cloverdale, while Jim Keeling, Jr., will be general manager of the operation.

Jim Jr. was, until two weeks ago, a lawyer in Orangeville, Ont., but he has been associated with the Raceway previously. The Keeling family owns 50 per cent of the overall operation.

Keeling's lease with the B.C. Jockey Club will be for four years with an option for an additional 16 years.

Olympic Bid Foggy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Los Angeles' bid for the 1984 Olympics Games was somewhat clouded Tuesday with word that the International Olympics Committee refused to consider the city's contract until it replies to the IOC's standard contract.

The city received a telegram Monday from IOC executive director Monique Berlioux, who said the IOC would not consider the draft contract cabled by the city last week until the city responds to an IOC draft contract handed to city officials in Mexico City on April 11.

Anton Calleia, mayor Tom Bradley's Olympics liaison, said IOC president Lord Killanin was "very concerned" about the city's proposed contract.

Despite the telegram, the city's ad hoc committee for the Games approved the city contract by a 3-2 vote and said it found the April 11 IOC contract unacceptable.

The committee also voted to extend Los Angeles' bid for 30 days, to June 17, nearly a month after the IOC meeting in Athens concludes.

The city's Olympic delegation, including mayor Bradley, will meet with IOC officials May 13 in Greece in hopes of signing a contract that would bring the Games to Los Angeles in 1984.

If the council approves the contract, the delegation probably will be allowed to only make non-substantive technical changes once in Athens.

Orient Club Avoids Drop

LONDON (Reuter) — Last of the ups-and-downs of Britain's soccer season was settled Tuesday night when Orient won 1-0 at Cardiff and so averted relegation from the English League's Second Division.

Orient reached the semi-finals of the Football Association Cup, but this phenomenal run masked its failure to pick up league points as teams below them staged desperate rallies.

Tuesday's result means that Blackpool, another team which slumped alarmingly through the later part of the season, will join Mansfield and Hull in Division Three.

A goal by Peter Kitchen 10 minutes before half time enabled Orient to avoid the drop. Later Derek Clarke hit a Cardiff post.

Ipswich, which won the FA Cup Saturday, completed its league program by losing 2-1 at home to Wolverhampton. Arsenal, their victims at Wembley, fared no better. Derby beat them 3-0, but Arsenal retained fourth place in the final First Division standings.

And Wrexham won the Welsh Cup on Tuesday by outscoring Bangor 1-0 to take the home-and-away series by a 3-1 margin.

Mike Vossen Takes Crown At Regina

Mike Vossen, who had placed second last year, took the men's open crown as he won three of six events. Vossen topped the list on pommel horse, rings and parallel bars, finished second in floor exercise and high bar, and was third in vault.

Tracy Beer earned the runner-up position in the women's open competition for the second successive year. Leader in the floor exercise and second on bars and beam, Tracy wound up with a total of 33.35 points as 11-year-old Bonnie Wittmeir of Manitoba tallied 33.65 to win by a narrow margin.

Before The Judge

Guilty pleas to three charges were entered in family court Tuesday on behalf of a 13-year-old boy who led two Greater Victoria police forces on a high-speed car chase which ended when the stolen vehicle crashed through a fence at Pay Bay airport.

The youth, whose name cannot be published because he is a juvenile, was orginally charged May 2 with taking an auto without the owner's consent, dangerous driving, possession of a firearm and ammunition, obstructing a peace officer, carrying a concealed weapon and driving without a valid driver's licence.

Defence lawyer Ted Hanman entered guilty pleas on the first three counts and Crown counsel John Higginbotham entered stays of proceeding on the others.

Judge Fred Giles, who released the boy to his father's custody, remanded the case for one month for a pre-sentence report and sentencing.

A 19-year-old who broke the terms of his probation by not performing his community service work had another 50 hours of it tacked on by Judge Harold Alder.

Jarvis Clarence Evans, no fixed address, pleaded guilty and Crown counsel Don Laughton told the court Evans was convicted March 3 of mischief causing wilful damage.

Judge William Ostler gave Evans a suspended sentence, placed him on six months probation and ordered him to perform 150 hours of community service work.

Laughton said Evans had not even reported to the probation officer as directed.

Alder handed out another suspended sentence and six months probation but added a further 50 hours of work.

Extra Sittings Ease Court Jam

Provision of extra sittings in Victoria county court has prevented the backlog of cases from growing for at least a month.

A month ago, trial dates were being set in November and only 21 court days remained open in 1978.

It was expected that when the next trial dates were set Tuesday some people would find their cases being booked into early 1979.

But Judge Leslie Cashman, presiding at Call Day when non-jury trial dates were set, said Chief Justice Nathan Nemetz has arranged for an extra county court judge to sit in Victoria for the weeks of July 24 and 31.

In addition, there will be an extra county court judge on Vancouver Island to deal with criminal matters starting Sept. 5.

"I expect the majority of his time to be in Victoria but I do expect some long trials in the county of Nanaimo," said Cashman.

The extra help arranged by Nemetz meant that Tuesday's Call Day cases were all accommodated without lengthening the backlog. Next call day is in June.

St. John Meeting Here on Saturday

The annual meeting of the provincial council of St. John Ambulance will be held at 10 a.m. Saturday at the Tillicum Presbyterian Church hall, 2964 Tillicum Road.

There will be an election of provincial council officers and annual reports of the provincial council, Vancouver Island and British Columbia branches will be presented.

In the afternoon 10 members of the Order will be promoted to a higher grade and 15 new officers invested at a ceremony in Government House. The investiture will be conducted by Lieutenant-Governor Walter Owen.

The ceremony will begin with a procession of robed Knights of St. John, led by the Grand Sword Bearer and the Standard Bearer. Entering the ballroom from the upper balcony, the procession will sit in a semi-circle during the ceremony, which is little changed from investitures held in Rhodes, Malta and parts of England and Europe as early as the 10th century.

Blanshard Light Job Awarded

Progress on the Blanshard Street extension took another step closer to completion Tuesday with the letting of a $250,000 contract to install ornamental street lighting, traffic signals, fire signals and directional signs.

All wiring for the lighting systems will be underground, Highways Minister Alex Fraser said.

Traffic signals will be placed at Blanshard and Saanich Road, Saanich Road and Vernon Avenue, Saanich Road and Seymour Street and at Blanshard and Cloverdale.

The project should be completed by late October.

Airport Robbers Goof

LONDON (UPI) — Six gunmen raided two strongrooms at London's Heathrow airport Tuesday, tied up three watchmen, and escaped with — nothing.

Detectives said the gang apparently did its homework wrong and the strongrooms, which often contain bullion, jewelry and currency worth millions of pounds, contained nothing of value this time.

The raiders, six men wearing ski masks and carrying shotguns, zeroed in on the Air France cargo terminal and left behind crates of scotch whisky and a $26,000 statue of a horse's head.

"They seemed to be after money," one of the watchmen said. "There was some jewelry about but they didn't touch it."

Uranium Permit Freeze Urged

The B.C. Medical Association's environmental health committee will call for a freeze on uranium mining permits pending a judicial inquiry into all aspects of this type of mining.

It will also recommend at its annual meeting May 18-20 in Vernon that the controversial herbicide 2,4-D not be used anywhere until adequate protection for the health of the public is assured.

"Retrospectively discovered hazards such as asbestos, PCB, ionizing radiation and polyvinyl chloride demonstrate graphically that we can no longer grope ahead on the assumption that we will find technologocal answers to the various problems that may arise with the development of increasingly sophisticated technologies," committee chairman Dr. Robert Woollard of Clearwater says in a report to the association.

"The medical profession must do everything within its power to ensure that potential health hazards are identified."

AWARD PLANNED FOR HEROINE

CALGARY (CP) — Two-time heroine Dawn May is to be recommended for a bravery award.

Mrs. May, who moved here from Regina two years ago, jumped through a broken basement window to rescue a neighbor's two-year-old daughter from a blazing bedroom.

"We're certainly putting her in for something," fire department spokesman Larry Anderson said today.

"She did one helluva job and undoubtedly saved the little girl's life."

For Mrs. May, it was her second rescue in two years. While she was in Regina, she saved two boys from drowning at Echo Lake, northeast of Regina.

On both occasions, it was her training in mouth-to-mouth resuscitation that meant the difference between life and death.

Meanwhile, a hospital spokesman said the girl she saved, Jennifer Conlin, is recovering from burns to her face and upper part of the body.

The Starship Still Follows 5-Year Mission

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Behind the golden pillars in the entry way to the three-storey black mansion near Golden Gate Park stands an ancient airplane propeller.

On the other side of the room near the staircase, visitors can't miss the silver model of a sleek, delta-winged aircraft — a starship.

It's called the Airplane House and serves as headquarters and occasional home of Jefferson Starship — or, for those still firmly rooted in the 1960s, the Jefferson Airplane.

One of the San Francisco bands that blossomed during the city's flower-power era, the group has shunned recording centres like Los Angeles and New York in favor of San Francisco.

"We don't go after it — the Big Apple thing," said guitarist Paul Kantner, who founded the Airplane in 1965 with vocalist Marty Balin, and then put together the Starship in 1974.

"Everybody who lives in San Francisco is like that," he said. There's not that big hectic varoom all the time.

Starship bass-keyboard man David Freiborg, who joined the Airplane in 1972, walks into the second-floor office in Airplane House and sits next to Kantner — just below the pinned-up crayon drawing signed by China, seven-year-old daughter of Kantner and Slick.

Kantner and Slick have ended their widely-publicized relationship and now are the best of friends. "But no Sonny and Cher rumors, please," Kantner said.

Kantner, 37, and Freiborg, near 40, talked about what has kept them interested in performing.

"I may look down after a concert and realize I smashed my finger on the bass and there's blood all over the piano," Freiborg said. "But I didn't feel it."

"Music should have a religious atmosphere," Kantner said. "Like a Catholic high mass. When it's right, it's the universe in movement."

Kantner's background was in folk music and his idols were the Weavers and Pete Seeger. Balin was in a folk group before the Airplane was formed in 1965.

The band became known for Slick's driving vocals and a thundering electric sound, illustrated in the singles Somebody to Love and White Rabbit.

Rogers Suspended For CBC Walkout

TORONTO — Announcer Bruce Rogers said Tuesday he has been suspended by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. for three days as a reprimand for the "unprofessional conduct" the CBC says he showed by taking part in two walkouts by announcers last month.

Rogers said fellow announcers would give him their full support. Some of the announcers are holding a meeting today.

Don McPherson, a senior CBC vice-president, refused to confirm the suspension.

"We don't discuss internal discipline procedures with the public, with anyone," he said.

Rogers, a CBC employee for 18 years, said the suspension decision was selective and discriminatory because nine of the 40 announcers who walked out were originally selected to be disciplined.

A disciplinary hearing was held last week and Rogers said he is the only one against whom any action has been taken.

The announcers, members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, walked out to protest the CBC's insistence on the right to hire announcers on contract rather than as staff members.

The announcers said if the CBC was allowed to hire on contract, the number of announcers in the union gradually would diminish and the union eventually would lose its jurisdiction.

WEBSTER GETTING A NEW LINE

VANCOUVER — Open-line broadcaster Jack Webster will join British Columbia Television Ltd. Oct. 2, Ray Peters, president of Western Broadcasting Co. Ltd., said Tuesday.

Peters said Webster will host an open-line television program on BCTV Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 10:30 a.m.

Peters said Webster, 60, will deal with news and public affairs as an extension of the station's news department.

World Chance

VANCOUVER — Miss Vancouver will represent Canada at the Miss Universe beauty pageant this July in Mexico City.

Andrea Eng, 22, will substitute for Miss Canada, Catherine Swing, who is unable to compete in the international contest due to marriage plans.

Western Winners

WINNIPEG — Residents of Alberta and British Columbia held the five top $100,000 tickets in last week's Western Express lottery draw, it was announced Tuesday.

The winners are John Marsden, 39, an Edmonton air traffic controller; Peter Grant, 52, a welder from Quesnel; Neil Channon, 33, of Westlock, Alta., a construction worker; Steve Hawirko of North Vancouver; and Mr. and Mrs. D. Coleman of Stauffer, Alta.

Vietnam Embezzler 'A Prince' in Montreal

MONTREAL (CP) — A former high-ranking South Vietnamese official says a Vietnamese banker who bilked his countrymen of thousands of dollars is living in luxury in Montreal.

In a book launched here Tuesday entitled La Corruption au Vietnam (Corruption in Vietnam), Le Phuong says the former banker and textile merchant, identified as Nguyen Tan Doi, escaped to Canada after the fall of Saigon in May, 1975.

Phuong, a pseudonym the author uses for self-protection, says Doi had been jailed in Vietnam just prior to the Communist victory after the bank he established — known as La Confiance (the Trust) — was investigated by Vietnamese officials.

The investigators found that nearly 2.5 billion Vietnamese piastres (about $295,000 American dollars in 1975) in deposits had mysteriously disappeared.

Phuong alleges that Doi, who was nicknamed Jo La Confiance, had invested the money in a number of bogus companies which he controlled.

Rich and influential even while in jail, Doi managed to obtain a Canadian passport and slipped out of the country to join relatives in Montreal who were already Canadian citizens.

Phuong says the former banker now lives "like a prince" in Montreal on the revenues from a successful restaurant-motel operation and an adjoining block of luxury apartments here.

In an interview, Phuong said he could offer no proof that Doi is in Montreal, but "every Vietnamese here knows him."

Phuong, who served as a top civil servant during the French and American occupations of Vietnam and now lives in Texas, said he has not seen Doi since leaving the Orient.

The author writes about another Vietnamese, Dang Van Quang, a former general accused of corruption in Vietnam, who now works as a dishwasher in a Montreal restaurant.

Phuong told a reporter that Doi had helped Quang enter Canada after he was forced the leave the United States where he had gone following the fall of Saigon.

Quang was also ordered deported from Canada, but immigration officials could not find a country willing to take him.

The author seemed reticent to answer questions about Doi's activities in Montreal, referring several times to an article which appeared in La Presse Monday by reporter Pierre Saint-Germain.

Saint-Germain, who wrote the introduction to Phuong's book, tracked down the owner of an east-end restaurant-motel, a man in his 50s. But he was unable to confirm that the man was Doi.

In his book, published by Editions Quebec-Amerique, Phuong alleges that Doi built his wealth on the illegal trafficking of textiles during the 1960s. At that time, there was a serious shortage of clothing in Vietnam.

Doi went on to establish a bank which claimed to offer 43-per-cent interest on longer-term, fixed deposits and a system of coded accounts to protect the identity of depositors, which included highly-placed Vietnamese officials.

Phuong indicates that Doi was also involved in the drug trade and the black market in American dollars and gold.

CBC SUIT MOVE SOUGHT

SHERBROOKE, Que. (CP) — Radio-Canada, the CBC's French-language network, asked Tuesday that a libel suit brought against it by kidnap victim Charles Marion be heard in Montreal rather than Sherbrooke.

Marion, the loans manager at a local credit union, was kidnapped and held for 82 days before his family paid a ransom of $50,000 last October.

He is claiming $500,000 from Radio-Canada and its reporter, Andre Fournier, for alleging in a news broadcast that he may have been an accomplice to his own kidnapping.

Marion, who has not returned to work at the credit union in this city 150 kilometres east of Montreal since his release, has also sued two other reporters and a tabloid newspaper for making the same allegations.

No arrests have been made in connection with the kidnapping.

The request for a change of venue was taken under deliberation Tuesday by Mr. Justice Thomas Toth of Quebec Superior Court.

DEALS REMAIN IF QUE. SPLITS

NEW YORK (CP) — New York state power officials are confident they will be able to fulfil their long-term contracts for the purchase of Quebec hydro-electric power even if Quebec should separate.

Chairman Frederick Clark, speaking for the five power authority trustees, said they had already explored the alternatives of doing business with Quebec if the forthcoming referendum on independence is successful. The trustees were convinced that Quebec still would be doing business with the United States.

Elaborating on his remarks in an interview, Clark said the trustees look on the sale by the power authority of 800,000 kilowatts of power imported from Hydro Quebec to three private utilities in the state as strictly a business proposition.

"We feel that if Quebec should separate from the federal government, we'd still continue to do business. It's strictly a business proposition. We're buying and they're selling, either way."

45% Yes 'Not Defeat' for PQ

By FRANK RUTTER
Times London Bureau

LONDON — Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Claude Morin asserted here that the Parti Quebecois government would abide by a "no" vote, but he could not decide exactly how big a majority the "noes" would require in a Quebec referendum.

"Forty-nine-per cent yes — I don't think this would be what you would call a defeat", he said at a news conference Tuesday.

"Forty-five, six, seven, eight, nine per cent — this would not be exactly a defeat."

Such a vote "could bring about changes that otherwise would not come" Morin said. But he did not explain.

He was sure, however, that if the "yes" vote was as low as 30 per cent "that would be defeat".

Several times during his London visit, Morin painstakingly explained that there could be only one referendum during each electoral mandate of a Quebec government.

He also stressed that he is unable to say exactly what question would appear on the referendum ballot. This has a bearing, he said, on the opinion polls which have so far apparently gone against the PQ.

"Twenty-five or 20 per cent are in favor of Quebec separating — this is not the same", he said.

"If I were polled on the phone I would answer 'No.' What surprises me is how many say yes to that question. We're talking about separatists, not people who want sovereignty-association."

Sovereignty-association has not been completely defined, he said.

"When you ask people, one day they will feel sovereignty association is a good concept and answer 'yes'. The next day they will answer 'no' because they thought of something else."

Morin said Quebec would like to be part of the Commonwealth as well as taking part in "activities relating to the French speaking world", and "we don't have any particular opposition to the British monarchy."

He met Commonwealth Secretary-General Sridath Ramphal on Tuesday—at the latter's invitation—and discussed ways in which Quebec could take advantage of existing Commonwealth programs.

Morrin also met a group of British bankers and "it was very good," as well as officials at the British foreign office. He left for Paris and Brussels today.

STRIKE ENDS

DUBLIN (Reuter) — Ireland's airline and post office workers returned to their jobs Monday after strikes which severely reduced air and telephone links with other countries for several weeks.

Washington, Oregon & Idaho.

The great green adventure land on your doorstep.

Just across the border is some of the most exciting holiday country anywhere, from evergreen forest to open seacoast, metropolis to magnificent mountain range. There are many points of entry... but suppose we begin by following Highway 5, south of Vancouver.

It's less than 3 hours driving time to Seattle, where you'll enjoy attractions like the Space Needle, the monorail and the new Kingdome. From here, a short side-trip takes you to the mountain forests and alpine meadows of the rugged Cascade Range. But for a grand "circle tour", continue on Highway 5 through southwest Washington... crossing the Columbia River to Portland, "the City of Roses" and Oregon's major centre.

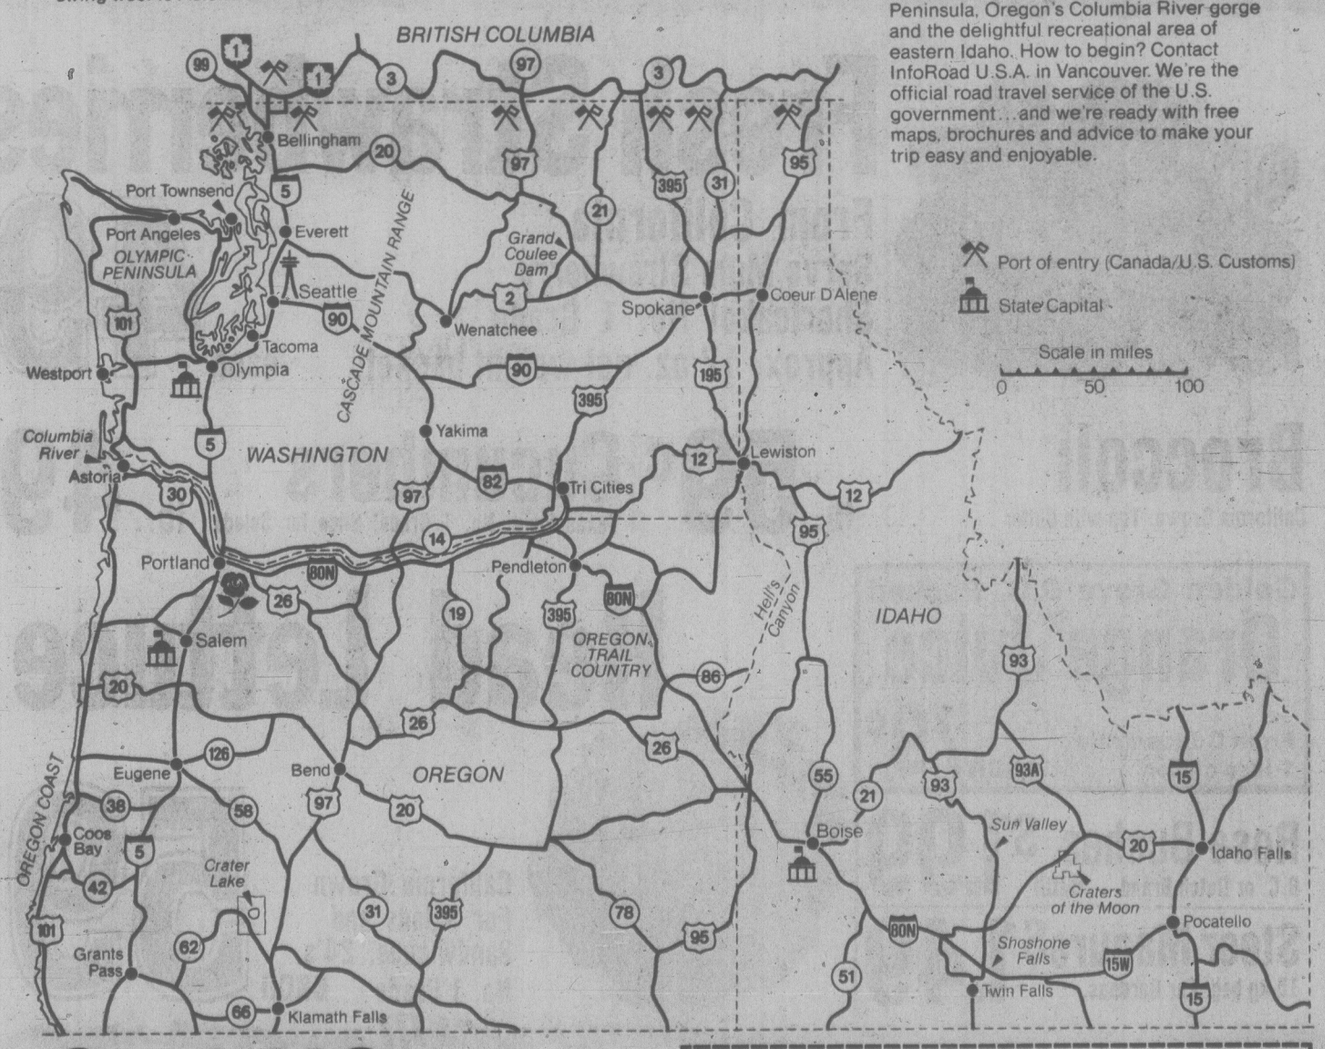

After shopping and sightseeing in Portland, swing west to Astoria and follow the spectacular Oregon Coast Highway route 101, over 400 miles past broad sandy beaches and rocky headlands. Fabulous for fishing, clam digging, beachcombing and savoring the clear sea air. Then head east to the Oregon interior, pausing at Crater Lake before continuing on to southwest Oregon, a totally different landscape that's a mecca for rockhounds.

Turning north, you'll enter the Oregon Trail country, land of round-ups ghost towns and cattle ranches. To the east is Idaho—a state of scenic surprise.

Entering southern Idaho, you can visit the state capital of Boise... then loop southeast and view breathtaking Shoshone Falls on the Snake River (it's higher than Niagara). To the north is Craters of the Moon National Monument, an incredible "moonscape" of volcanic origin, while just beyond here is the famous year-round resort centre of Sun Valley.

On the northbound leg of your "circle", be sure to see Hell's Canyon on the Snake River, North America's deepest river gorge. Then visit the Emerald Empire of northern Idaho before crossing the state line back into Washington. From Spokane, site of Expo 74, you can plan the final portion of your tour: west past Grand Coulee Dam and across the Cascades to the Coast... north across the border to the Kootenays, or northwest into B.C.'s Okanagan region.

We can help you see it all! It's a whale of a trip, but even then you haven't seen the half of it. Still remaining are other vast scenic stretches, including Washington's Olympic Peninsula, Oregon's Columbia River gorge and the delightful recreational area of eastern Idaho. How to begin? Contact InfoRoad U.S.A. in Vancouver. We're the official road travel service of the U.S. government... and we're ready with free maps, brochures and advice to make your trip easy and enjoyable.

U.S.-Canada Prisoner Swap

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is about to trade prisoners with Canada in a scaled-down version of a similar program begun with Mexico last December.

About 150 of 200 U.S. prisoners now in Canadian jails are eligible under a treaty with the United States to return if they wish. About 50 are expected to return when the transfer takes place, probably by mid-July.

In return, about 35 Canadians in U.S. prisons are expected to return home.

The U.S. prisoners in Canadian jails are "what you would call your hard-core criminal element," said Michael Abbell, a U.S. justice department lawyer who has worked on the program since mid-1977, when treaty accords were reached with Mexico and Canada.

About 60 per cent of the U.S. prisoners in Canadian jails were charged with violent crimes, including 40 accused of homicide.

Only one-fourth were convicted of drug-related offences, the crime that accounted for more than 90 per cent of the 300 U.S. prisoners who have so far returned from Mexican jails.

Those expected to return from Canada may have considerable time remaining on their sentences, which will be served in U.S. prisons.

Plane Bids to Cabinet

OTTAWA (CP) — Defence planners will soon ask cabinet to consider dropping some of the contenders for the $2.3 billion new fighter program, the richest single defence contract in Canadian history.

Brig.-Gen. Paul Manson, head of the fighter project team, said Tuesday his group is winding up its evaluation of bids by the five competing companies. Then his group will ask for cabinet guidance on where to go from here.

One of the options the group will suggest is a short list of contenders, he said. The government might then negotiate detailed contracts with each company on the short list. The cabinet could then select the contract it liked best and sign it.

Manson stressed this is only one of the options that will be presented to cabinet.

The decision was up to cabinet. Cabinet could decide to reject the short list and ask the fighter project group to negotiate separate contracts with each of the contenders, he said. Or it could choose to do something entirely different.

Manson refused to discuss the alternatives in detail as he said cabinet has yet to look at the proposals and reach a decision.

The contending aircraft are the Grumman F-14, the McDonnell Douglas F-15, the General Dynamics F-16, the McDonnell Douglas and Northrop versions of the F-18 and the Panavia Tornado. Panavia is a British-German-Italian consortium and the other companies are American.

The government invited the companies last September to submit bids to supply 130 to 150 fighters to replace aging CF-101 and CF-104 jets. The government is looking for a multi-role fighter that can meet Canada's military needs in Europe and North America.

The competing companies have been told aircraft performance, price and benefits they can offer to Canadian industry will be factors in the final selection.

William Baker, Canadian vice-president of McDonnell Douglas Corp. of St. Louis, Mo., said in a recent interview a "short list is desirable."

Canadian sub-contractors for the fighter contract are hard-pressed to submit detailed bids for all five competing companies, he said.

He and Manson said small Canadian companies are finding preparation of contract estimates expensive.

COURT MARTIAL ADMITS TAPES

OTTAWA (CP) —New evidence in the form of tapes made during a polygraph examination was admitted in military court Tuesday during the court martial of WO Kenneth Cooper.

Cooper, 51, facing 16 charges involving the theft of $150,000 worth of equipment and funds from the Canadian Forces Central Band, said on tapes played for the court that he falsified petty cash vouchers to obtain electronic equipment for the good of the band.

The court heard two hours of tapes, which were recorded before Cooper was given the actual polygraph examination, commonly known as a lie detector test. Judge Advocate James Fay last week ruled inadmissable questions asked Cooper during the test and the results of the test.

Cooper told the polygraph examiner he began falsifying petty cash vouchers and invoices for goods from local music stores after he retired in March, 1977 and while on rehabilitation leave when he still had permission to work in the band's headquarters.

He said his fraudulent activities were carried out only for the good of the band.

"I didn't do it for personal gain," Cooper said on the tapes.

RCMP Inquiry Suspect

OTTAWA (CP) — An RCMP officer who questioned him about alleged "conduct unbecoming a member of the force" had himself been involved in one of the three incidents that led to the interrogation last June 23, RCMP Insp. Bernard Blier testified Tuesday.

Blier told the McDonald royal commission into RCMP wrongdoing that he reminded Insp. Paul Pothier of this during the 8½-hour interrogation but Pothier said he could not recall it.

Pothier was officer-in-charge of the RCMP internal discipline section in Montreal when the interrogation took place.

The incident involved an attempt in 1971 by Blier, a member of the RCMP's anti-terrorist G Section in Montreal in the early 1970s, to recruit a Trois-Rivieres man to inform on Quebec terrorists.

Blier testified that he went to the RCMP detachment at Trois-Rivieres and discussed with three Mounties there — Pothier, Marcel Huot and Pierre Bedard — how he might use warrants to draw the man into conversation.

The idea was to make the man believe he would be arrested if he didn't come with Blier to the Trois-Rivieres detachment.

Blier said it was the same Insp. Pothier who questioned him about the incident, along with another Mountie, at an internal inquiry last June.

"I said 'you know about them (the warrants). It was discussed in your office,'" Blier testified. "He said, no, he didn't remember. For him it was something new."

Blier said he didn't know whether this was mentioned in the report produced by Pothier.

Blier said he was told he could refuse to answer questions but this would be regarded as a "major service offence" and one that could lead to his dismissal from the force.

Blier said he was told he could not have a lawyer present.

Anything he said could be used against him later in court, and he had no right to remain silent.

The royal commission was told that a bill now before the Commons will give Mounties protection against such proceedings if it passes.

WASTED HEAT WORTH $1B?

EDMONTON (CP) — Canada's economy could get a $1-billion boost if wasted energy was used in food production, federal Environment Minister Len Marchand said Tuesday.

Marchand, in a prepared statement read by a parliamentary secretary to the Canadian Water Resources Association conference, said cities and winter greenhouses could be heated with energy now wasted by industry.

Last year, Canada imported $1-billion worth of fruit, vegetables and nuts, Marchand said.

These products could have been produced in greenhouses powered by waste heat, the minister said.

Thermal power plants waste up to 70 per cent of their fuel in heating water which is dumped. The heat could be used for cities, greenhouses in winter and fish farming.

RCMP Letter Probe Angers MP

VANCOUVER (CP) — Conservative MP Elmer MacKay and a Richmond couple remain concerned and angry over unauthorized RCMP inspection of a letter the couple sent MacKay earlier this spring.

An RCMP spokesman said Tuesday the inspection was a simple mistake.

"It's too easy and pat an answer," said Jean Jones who sent the letter. "The RCMP just say it was a mistake, an accident and what can we say or do? I guess they could make another mistake at any time and examine anyone's mail."

MacKay, Progressive Conservative member for Central Nova, said the letter arrived at his House of Commons office in early April with a stamped message on it reading: "Inspected by RCMP technical unit. Safe to handle."

The stamp included spaces for a signature and a date, but neither was supplied.

On April 10, MacKay sent a letter to Solicitor-General Jean-Jacques Blais asking why the letter had been examined and why the inspection notice was not signed or dated.

When he received no reply by April 11, MacKay sent Blais another letter, asking the same questions and requesting an explanation of the minister's failure to reply to the first note.

"What I find particularly repugnant about this whole business — aside from violation of privacy — is the slackness with which my inquiry has been treated," MacKay said. "It's a pretty sleazy performance."

He said he suspects the letter may have been subject to inspection because earlier in the year Mrs. Jones had written a critical letter to Justice Minister Ron Basford.

The earlier letter told Basford that Mrs. Jones and her husband Terrence were appalled at the minister's action in having Toronto Sun editor-in-chief Peter Worthington and publisher Douglas Creighton prosecuted under the Official Secrets Act.

Blais did not reply to telephone messages left at his office Tuesday and it was learned that RCMP Commissioner R. H. Simmonds was away for the week.

Ron Henry, an RCMP staff sergeant and Commons-based public relations officer, said in a telephone interview from Ottawa that the letter was not opened and not read; it was fluoroscoped — passed through a device similar to those used for baggage at airport security gates.

He said that since MacKay had not requested fluoroscoping, the Jones' letter must have been included in the inspection by mistake.

"No mail is opened without the express consent of the addressee," said Henry.

HIGH AND DRY, the blades of one of the propellers that drive the Canadian submarine Okanagan look like the petals of some exotic flower as it undergoes a refit at HMC dockyard in Halifax. The submarine returns to the water this week for sea trials.

Brazil Eyed As Arms King

RIO DE JANEIRO (WP)— One year after cancelling exclusive military aid and supply agreements with the United States, Brazil is being courted by leading Western European arms manufacturers to establish joint ventures here for supplying the local market and for export.

Negotiations have already yielded several major weapons-plant deals and more are expected. West German, French, Italian, Belgian and British interests are proving eager to increase their role in what is seen as Latin America's most lucrative and sophisticated arms market.

"Naturally, we're interested in acquiring state-of-the-art weapons for our armed forces," a Brazilian official said, "but our main interest is exporting the equipment made here. By 1980, arms exports are going to be a billion-dollar-a-year item in our balance of trade."

Local manufacturers are already exporting some military items, such as armored cars and light aircraft, either designed here or built under licence.

Now Brazil's military rulers are in the midst of an ambitious long-term drive to put their armed forces on an independent footing. They show little interest in the outright arms purchase deals traditionally offered developing nations.

Army Minister Fernando Belfort Bethlem said recently, "Our policy is to try to nationalize our war materiel industry and reduce our need to import military equipment."

"For the Brazilians, self-sufficiency is the name of the game," said a foreign militay observer. "Every joint venture they sign with a European firm means they're that much closer to their goal."

"We have certain basic demands that any proposal from outside must meet," said a Brazilian official. "We must have majority control, the transfer of technology must be complete and without any need to pay royalties, and there must be no obligation on our part to buy anything for our armed forces."

A recent Rand Corp. study, saying Brazil is already the Third World's "most advanced" arms producer and exporter, predicts that Brazil's arms production will grow as a result of programs in conjunction with West Germany, France, Italy and the United States for "the assembly or manufacture of jets, transport aircraft, helicopters, tanks and land-to-land and land-to-air missiles."

ICE SLOTS TO CHECK SPILLS

REDWATER, Alta. (CP) — Oil was recovered successfuly from the ice-covered North Saskatchewan River recently in a major experiment sponsored by the oil industry and the Alberta governmnt.

The program, almost two years old, has cost more than $100,000 but provides an important weapon in the fight against under-ice oil spills. Hundreds of thousands of barrels of oil are transported under the North Saskatchewan every day.

'Dozens of pipelines cross under the river and several experts believe it is inevitable that a major pipeline break will occur during winter and spill crude oil under river ice where conventional cleanup equipment cannot recover it.

Hermann A. R. Steltner, an Ontario consultant, found during research in the Edmonton area in 1971 that oil collected in slots cut in river ice.

Harry Woodman, chairman of the Prairie Region Oil Spill Containment and Recovery Advisory Committee, said Steltner's work made it obvious more research was necessary.

The environment protection service of the federal environment department, the Canadian Petroleum Association and the Petroleum Association for Conservation of the Canadian Environment agreed to support the research financially.

The concept was tested at Imperial Oil's laboratory in Calgary and University of Calgary proposed a system, useful under ice and in open water, which used air bubbles as a barrier to divert crude slicks into channels where they could be recovered.

Testing of a third possibility, which involves placing a wooden barrier through a trench in the ice and into the top few inches of river water, were studied by federal environment department officials at Burlington, Ont.

Until recently, howeeer, the industry and government scientists did not know how the system would work under actual conditions. The demonstration site was located 50 kilometres upstream from Edmonton, near this community.

A four-foot slot, several hundred feet long was cut in the ice almost three feet thick. The slot was angled 30 degrees against the direction of the river current.

Rapeseed cooking oil was poured under the ice, first in quantities of a few gallons. Eventually, more than a barrel was poured through the hole about 1 yards upstream from the slot.

The researchers expected the oil to collect in the slot and it did, faster than anticipated.

An underwater television camera showed virtually no oil passed beyond the slot. The test was so successful that it was repeated with crude oil—which contains substances poisonous to fish—and the recovery rate was as good as during the first experiment.

Once trapped in the ice slot, the oil was carried to the shore, where it was skimmed from the water with a pump-like device.

Cherry Sauce adds both eye, taste appeal to pork chops

Cheery Change For Pork Chops

By MARY MOORE

Flavor, simplicity and a cheery change are the virtues of the presentation for today.

Pork chops are the basis and the number and thickness you buy depends upon the appetites of the members (growing or/and male) of your family.

When we served it we supplied one thick pork chop each, for the Cherry Sauce over it is a succulent stretcher.

CHERRY PORK CHOPS (Serves 4 to 6)

4 to 6 thick lean pork chops
Salt Pepper
1¼ cups water
One envelope gravy mix (see note below re alternative)
2 Tbsp. lemon juice
⅛ tsp. nutmeg
1 cup cherry pie filling.

NOTE: If you do not have packaged gravy mix measure 4 teaspoons flour and the 1¼ cups cold water (above) into a saucepan. Add 1 to 1½ beef bouillon cubes and cook stirring with wire whip until thick and beef cube is dissolved.

Brown pork chops on both sides in large lightly oiled frying pan. Sprinkle with salt and pepper.

In a two-cup measuring cup stir together water, gravymix, lemon juice and nutmeg. Pour over pork chops. Cover, simmer 40 minutes or until pork chops are tender. Remove chops to preheated holding plate. To pan add and stir in cherry pie filling then return chops and cover and simmer 10 minutes longer. Serve on preheated platter surrounded with border of Fluffy Rice.

FOOD & nutrition

Food for Thought

TORONTO (CP) — What you eat controls the way your brain works, says a Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor.

Dr. Richard Wartman told a two-day nutrition symposium here that certain foods influence the brain's behavior. By eating sponge cake, milk, liver or scrambled eggs, persons can counteract insomnia, sensitivity to pain and even memory loss.

The reason lies in chemicals secreted by the brain, he said. The brain is composed of thousands of neuron cells and they release neuron transmitters, chemicals that transmit messages and impulses.

Foods with certain nutrients stimulate the production of certain neuron transmitters, creating certain signals.

"Every time you eat a meal there are chemical changes in the brain. . . . The brain is susceptible to the slings and arrows of outrageous diet.

"The consumption of an omelet is a very important event in the life of your brain."

These findings have enormous implications in the study of brain disorders, Dr. Wartman said. Certain physical disorders such as Parkinson's disease and some movement disorders are characterized by a lack of specific neuron transmitters.

Such diseases are untreatable with drugs but they might be controlled in the future with nutrients.

For example, users of anti-psychotic drugs experience a movement disorder characterized by muscle spasms and uncontrolled movements of the tongue. However, these symptoms disappear or are greatly reduced in patients fed high levls of lecithin, an amino acid found in liver, eggs and soybeans.

60-Minute Gourmet

A Taste Of Acid

By PIERRE FRANEY

Much has been made of various manifestations involved in the nouvelle cuisine of French cookery. One of the dishes that has captured the public fancy is poulet au vinaigre, actually a saute of chicken with a trace of vinegar and, generally, tomato among the ingredients.

The use of vinegar as an important ingredient in serious cookery is not a new invention. The mildly acid taste of the liquid has long been part of the sauces used with certain foods, principally pork, and such sauces as Robert and charcuterie.

Vinegar, as a matter of fact, complements foods that have somewhat high fat contents, including pork chops.

There is here a version of sauteed pork chops with Robert sauce. The components include not only vinegar but a touch of tomato, dry white wine and a dab of mustard for added piquancy.

Pork chops are best cooked either in a short span of time, to prevent them from drying out, or over a long period of time, to make them more tender.

In the dish here, the pork chops should be cooked rapidly, preferably five to six minutes to a side, depending on thickness.

SAUTEED PORK CHOPS

8 pork chops, each about half an inch in diameter
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespoons peanut, vegetable or corn oil
½ cup finely chopped onion
6 tablespoons plus 1 teaspoon dry white wine
2 tablespoons red wine vinegar
1 cup chicken broth
1 tablespoon tomato paste
1 teaspoon cornstarch
1 tablespoon mustard such as Dijon or Dusseldorf.

1. Sprinkle the chops with salt and pepper.

2. Heat the oil in a heavy skillet in which the chops will fit in one layer. Add the chops and cook about five minutes or until well browned on one side.

3. Turn the chops on the other side five to six minutes. The chops must be cooked rapidly over very high heat or they will toughen. Total cooking time should be from about 10 to 12 minutes.

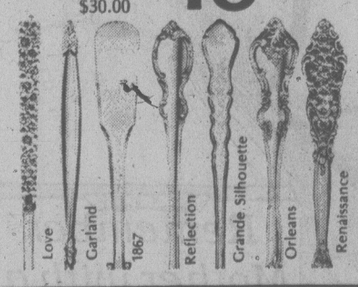

4. Remove the chops to a warm serving platter and pour off most of the fat from the skillet. Add the onions and cook briefly, stirring. Add six table spoons of the wine and the vinegar and stir with a wire whisk.

5. Add the chicken broth and tomato paste and stir to blend. Cook about five minutes. Blend the cornstarch and remaining one teaspoon wine and stir it into the sauce.

6. Spoon and scrape the sauce into a saucepan and add the mustard. Add any juices that have accumulated around the chops, salt and a generous amount of black pepper. Heat the sauce without boiling and serve with the chops. Serve with pureed potatoes.

Yield: 4 servings.

Skip Those Fantastic Claims eating right

By RUTH FREMES and ZAK SABRY

In a way many of our older folks had the good fortune of growing in the days when food was wholesome. Many were raised in rural communities or small towns. There was little chance to fill up on highly-sweetened or fatty foods. Manual work with vigorous physical activity was a way of life. It was a healthy lifestyle. They knew what to eat to maintain robust good health.

That is not to say that older people nowadays aren't confused about nutrition. They are. Judging from our mail, however, the confusion rests, not in their understanding of diets, but with the misleading information that abounds in the popular press. "Take these pill and live longer." "Wear this bracelet and cure your arthritis." These claims quickly erase all of the nutrition learning of the past.

The general rule of thumb about such claims is to ignore any claims that sound fantastic, particularly those that promise cures from illnesses by eating a food or a supplement. A good diet will keep you healthy. Cures from diseases will depend on the medical care you receive.

The often-asked question is whether the over-65s need more nutrition to slow down aging and keep them healthy. The answer is that nutritional needs do not change in older years. A well balanced diet for an older person should be no different from that of a younger person.

Here are the elements of a balanced diet for the old and the not-so-old. We'll list the important food groups and the main nutrients they provide:

Milk and Dairy Products

For calcium, phosphorus, riboflavin, vitamins A and D: have a total of 16 oz. skim, 2% or whole milk every day; or have enough of these other milk equivalents to make 16 oz. milk:

1 inch cube cheddar chese = ½ cup (4 oz.) milk.

½ cup yogurt = ½ cup (4 oz.) milk.

½ cup cottage cheese = ⅓ cup (2⅔ oz.) milk.

3 oz. canned salmon or sardines = ½ cup (4 oz.) milk.

Meat and Meat Alternates

For protein, iron, the B vitamins and many minerals: have at least one serving of 3 oz. lean beef, lamb, veal, pork or fish. Alternates to meat include a cup of cooked dried beans, peas, lentils or nuts or 4 tablespoons of peanut butter. In addition have a 2 oz. serving of liver once a week and an average of 3 or 4 eggs a week.

Bread and Cereals

For carbohydrate, iron, B vitamins, protein and many minerals; have four servings each day of breads (whole grain or enriched), cereals (cooked or ready-to-eat), whole grain, unsweetened cornmeal, macaroni, spaghetti, noodles, rice ("parboiled" or "converted").

One serving consists of any of these; one slice of bread, or one oz. whole grain ready-to-eat cereal, or ½ to ¾ cup cooked cereal, macaroni, rice, noodles or spaghetti.

Fruit and Vegetables

For carbohydrate, essential vitamins and minerals; have four or more servings each day. These should include one serving of citrus fruit or a 4 oz. glass of citrus juice. Keep to the darker green vegetables and bright orange fruits and vegetables for a good supply of vitamins A and C and folic acid. Include potatoes often.

This is one group where you can go overboard and enjoy low-calorie foods with maximum nutrition.

If in doubt about the state of your own nutrition, sit down and write everything you eat and divide into groups. If you are low in any one group, and if you would find it impossible to eat more from that group for idiosyncratic or health reasons, it would be acceptable to have a vitamin supplement that supplies the nutrients that are included in the group. Most of our readers, when they check back over their diets by writing them down, find that they are easily able to make simple adjustments in their menu to provide good overall nutrition. This way, vitamin supplements become unnecessary.

There are, of course, some problems for us as we age that need to be taken into account. Many of the over-65s are put on salt-free diets. Limiting salt means limiting sodium. It is simple enough to stop adding salt to foods. The problem is discovering which foods have salt added to them. Sodium is often a component of additives other than salt or sodium chloride. Monosodium glutamate, or example is a flavor enhancer and has been recommended for foods without salt in the mistaken belief that salt-free diets can use this instead. Not so. Monosodium glutamate, and also hydrolyzed vegetable protein, have sodium in them.

Other concerns may include constipation and indigestion. A sensible diet as we describe can be modified by a trained dietitian to help these problems. Ask your doctor for dietetic counselling.

Another problem that was uncovered in the Nutrition Canada survey is the tendency towards obesity among older women. This often happens when older people slow down, boredom sets in and they become sedentary. That is something to guard against. Community programs that encourage elderly people to get out and eat with others, programs that encourage moderate activity and exercise will do more for the nutritional status of older Canadians than empty nutrition promises.

Bio-dex

HOW TO USE YOUR CHART:

BIO-DEX READOUT:

0-5 Negative Cycle- Leave your money in the bank. Get-rich schemes are not for you.

6-10 Neutral Cycle- Don't be misled. Keep your eye on the intellectual level and think twice.

11-15 Positive Cycle- An influential person will play an important role in your activities shortly.

A Denver, Colorado supporter of biorhythms stated in an influential international magazine that the opportunities to use biorhythms could be limitless. He said the theory can put compatible policemen together in squad cars, determine the patterns of arsonists, and maybe even prevent birth defects. One thing is certain: We still have a lot to learn about biorhythms and their benefits, and I sincerely hope that research in this field will continue to be active.

'Cheesy Eddie' is King

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (UPI) — Would you like a rum raisin cheesecake? How about the kalua variety? Marble almond? Banana? Smoked salmon?

See Rochester's Eddie "Cheesy Eddie" David, 25, who moved here several years ago from The Bronx armed with his mother's cheesecake recipe and a $3 Sunbeam Mixmaster he bought from the Salvation Arm).

David came to Rochester as a college student but, remembering New York City as "the cheesecake capital of the world," he set to work baking in his apartment.

"One of my roommates' fathers, who was a gourmet chef, insisted that I sell my cheesecakes," David said. "I decided to go around and bring some samples to restaurants and I got a few accounts."

A few months later, he was filling orders for about 50 cheesecakes a week and turning customers away. Today, more than 50 accounts later, David has the makings of a cheesecake empire.

"People got my phone number and ladies would call me at 8:30 on Sunday mornings because they wanted cheesecake for their bridge club. It was getting to be too much."

So David borrowed about $20,000 from his parents, friends and relatives and searched for a suitable place to set up shop. It wasn't easy. It was the year of the natural gas crunch and Rochester Gas and Electric Corp. wasn't awarding any new gas accounts.

After a six-month search, David moved his mixing bowls, pie plates and blenders into a cozy hole-in-the-wall atop a travel agency, about a mile from downtown Rochester.

"The place was a wreck. The kitchen was coated with grease," he says. "I spent a week just cleaning the floor.

"I spent about six months accumulating equipment. I went to auctions and got some incredible deals. I had equipment stashed all over the city at friends' houses, in backyards and garages."

With his sister Marjory as manager, he hired six workers and Cheesy Eddie's Inc. was open for business. A year later, it had grossed $100,000, a figure David expects to double this year.

The product — one of the gooiest, creamiest and richest cheesecakes — sells for $3.99 a pound ("I only get the best ingredients") and comes in 10 basic varieties.

He's made over 30 kinds of cheesecake. Some have bombed.

"I tried a pistachio cheesecake and I added too much green food coloring. It looked absolutely disgusting."

Among the regular flavors are honey, mint chocolate chip, marble almond, banana and coffee walnut. And, of course, there's just plain cheesecake.

Cheesy Eddie will give almost any flavor a try if a customer wants it, including smoked salmon. A 25-pound, seven-layer wedding cake that sells for $187.50 is available on request. One was sent to a couple in Chicago.

But Cheesy doesn't eat his own cakes any more. He hasn't had a slice in more than a year.

"I'm a bit tired of it. I can enjoy a bite, but a slice is too much."

Sole by Any Name Is Just as Good tiny bennett

A one-pound frozen pack of sole in my local store was marked up to $2.15, and after an initial wince, I bought it. To buy chops or enough steak for three could cost even more, though at a lower price per pound.

To my surprise and very much to my delight, the defrosted fish was of exceptional quality — small, delicate fillets rather than the thick fillets so often disguised under the word sole.

For dinner I washed and carefully dried the fillets, sauted them in a little butter, turned them, and gently browned each side in turn under the broiler using my saute pan.

With just a squeeze of lemon they were so good that the next day I returned to the store and stocked up with all the frozen packs of sole I could fit into my household budget. Aside from buying fresh sole, which I can't do, this frozen sole is a reasonable substitute and close to fresh fish quality.

There is a great deal of confusion over the fish we call sole, because the authorities appear rather generous in permitting the name to apply to such a large range of fish species.

The great classical sole of the finest gourmet cooking is a fairly small, elongated flatfish caught on the European continental shelf and known as Dover sole, for the English seaport where so much of the finest quality was landed. And while this fish will never be replaced in popularity, existing marketing methods permit the use of the word sole for fish of the same family cursed with unappealing names such as witch flounder or hogchoker and yet of good flavor and texture.

There are about 12 actual soles available in the western Atlantic and the eastern Pacific — including two in the Pacific named Dover sole and English sole respectively. All that are marketed fresh or frozen are of a pleasantly delicate flavor, are easy on the digestion, a good source of protein, and low in calories if they are not slathered with butter.

Sole fillets are so delicate the frozen fish packs should be defrosted, separated into fillets, gently washed under the cold tap, drained and thoroughly dried with paper towel.

For, you see, there are better than 30-odd ways to simply cook sole, all of them classical. Let me run through a few of them.

SOLE AMARDINE

Brown slivered almonds in brown butter, remove from the pan, saute the sole fillets, add the slivered almonds, and brown the fish on both sides, without overcooking. Serve on hot plates with the almonds and brown butter as garnish.

SOLE FLORENTINE

The usual system of preparing this dish is by top-of-the-stove poaching with the fish resting on a bed of cooked spinach and with a covering of cheese sauce. And delicious it is.

My variation, however, is to make a thick bed of washed and well-drained uncooked spinach in a medium-sized oven pan, layer the sole fillets on top of the spinach, and drizzle on a mix of white wine and butter, or lemon juice and butter. The dish is then baked in a hot 475-degree oven on the top rack, for 12 to 15 minutes.

The dish is then lightly browned under the broiler, and the cheese sauce pouredover the fillets and delicately browned. The spinach cooks in its own juices and will sink down to a delicious layer beneath the fish. The fish and the spinach can then be cut into serving squares.

There's one dish that I adore and yet I don't know what it is called. All it is is sole sauted in butter, and/or lightly browned under the broiler and served with chilled white dessert grapes — makes a fine fish course at a formally prepared luncheon or dinner.

One should be careful to avoid the use of strong foods in the preparation of sole, as the flavor is so deliciously subtle pungent materials tend to overcome the fish.

An example of what I mean is Sole Nicoise, with the fish panfried in half butter, half olive oil, and garnished with tomatoes, tarragon, black olives and capers.

Treat sole gently, don't overcook it, and you will find it one of the great treats from the seas — even if your sole happens to be a hogchoker.

Shadowy Figure

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Fathers often are more resistant to treatment for child abuse than mothers, a social worker at the University of Michigan says.

Carolyn Jones said here at a workshop on child abuse that the father often is a shadowy figure in the background, sabotaging efforts to help an abusive mother.

Mother's Day Lunch Loser?

CHICAGO (UPI) — Mother's Day brunch this year might turn into a financial crunch for many U.S. restaurateurs promoting the buffet-style meal that has been gaining popularity as a family outing.

The average holiday Sunday brunch on May 14 may sell for as little as $6.50, excluding tax, gratuity, and liquor, at restaurants polled in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, according to a survey by Dacar Associates Ltd.

David Brill, president of the international food service consulting firm, said profits of restaurants featuring family-style brunches "not only will fail to go up on the holiday, but they may even drop unless restaurateurs cut food costs by using different methods of presentation to recycle foods already on hand."

Brill suggested that an appeal to the senses could control consumption.

"The sense of showmanship surrounding an elaborate buffet table is often viewed as a form of entertainment on an otherwise inactive day," Brill said. "Eye appeal is buy appeal, or, what you see is what you get.

The Dacar survey showed restaurants are expected to ring up more than $600 million this Mother's Day but, "profit margins could be slimmer for restaurants planning to make special preparations," Brill said.

He said higher food costs could be expected because of the higher food consumption.

"They get more food value for less money than at holiday dinners," Brill said of brunchers. "Each family member can return to the table an unlimited number of times."

Another drawback, said Brill, is that industry statistics show that the average amount of liquor consumed on family holidays is about 25 percent less than that consumed on non-holidays.

Flavorless Fruit? Try a Pie Instead.

Fresh tree fruit, apart from the citrus kinds, have been high in price this past winter so when I saw apples at 25 cents for 454 gms (one pound) I thought how lovely to have a firm crunchy fruit for a change.

They were Golden Delicious by name; juicy, it is true but lacking in flavor. So after the one try, those remaining were used with more flavorful ingredients to prevent total waste. The results were successful. If you have the same experience, you will find these recipes enough to trigger further ideas.

Cheese or Bacon Apple Pie served with steamed carrots and green peas (frozen, cooked) make a fine Sunday supper.

Cheese or Bacon Apple Pie

Pastry for a 2-crust pie.
(Hot water pastry recipe see below)
2 cups peeled, sliced apples
2 Tbsp brown sugar
1 Tbsp fresh angelica leaf
2 Tsp fresh lemon juice
¼ Tsp ground ginger (optional)
½ Cup cooked bacon pieces OR
2 Tbsp grated Cheddar cheese

Line 9 or 10-inch pie plate with pastry (recipe below). Roll spare edges under.

Peel apples (skins are tough now) and slice thinly into small bowl, squeezing lemon juice over each as sliced to prevent vitamin loss. Add sugar, angelica to lessen need for much sugar. Stir to mix.

Arrange apple mixture over pastry. Top with bacon or grated cheese. Use both if desired, in smaller quantities.

Begin browning in fairly hot oven at 217 deg. C for 10 minutes; lower heat to moderate 177 deg. C. for about 20 minutes until pastry is lightly browned and apples are tender.

Serves 4 or 5 with hot vegetables as suggested; or is equally good cold, but not chilled, with green vegetable salad.

For two people use a smaller pie plate and make 2 smaller pies, one savory and one fruit. Freeze one for use later.

One person would use half the listed ingredients, making one small pie and freeze the remaining dough for later use.

Hot Water Pastry

1½ cups unbleached flour
2 Tbsp wheat germ
½ Tsp baking powder
½ Tsp salt
½ cup soft margarine
¼ cup boiling water

Cut margarine into small pieces in mixing bowl. Pour in boiling water. Beat with hand beater until creamy.

Sift dry ingredients together, adding to margarine mixture using wooden spoon, until a soft ball is formed. Cover closely with waxed paper; chill in refrigerator until firm.

Roll out between two layers waxed paper. This makes one 2-crust 9 or 10-inch pie.

This same pastry is good for a fruit pie using the storage apples which need enlivening. You may find a few boxes of frozen berries or other kinds in the freezer. Use them now while fresh fruits are high in price.

Blackberry Apple Pie

Hot water pastry as above.
1½ cups frozen blackberries
1½ cups thinly sliced apples
2 Tbsp sugar
1 Tsp fresh angelica leaf
1 Tsp fresh lemon juice
1 Tbsp rice polishings if needed for thickening

If you want the seeds removed from the berries, add one tablespoon water to berries in small pan and heat only to soften, not to cook. Push pulp through wire sieve with wooden spoon, removing only the seeds.

Peel and thinly slice apples into strained pulp; add sugar, lemon juice, angelica leaf. If mixture seems too liquid, stir in rice polishings. It will thicken while baking.

Roll out half the pastry between 2 pieces waxed paper. Line 9 or 10-inch pie plate.

Put into fairly hot oven at 217 deg. C. for 10 minutes. Lower heat to moderate 177 deg. C. until apples are tender and pie is beautifully browned.

By doubling the pastry recipe, the Bacon-Apple Pie and the Blackberry Apple Pie can both be made in the larger size at the same time.

One or the other can be frozen for use in a week's time or the second amount of dough will keep, wrapped closely, in refrigerator shelf to use in two days time; or freeze for later.

Well flavored apples are a favorite for salads to give that crisp texture; in May we need to add a few plump raisins for sweetness, grated Cheddar cheese and ground raw peanuts for flavor. And then blend it all together with smooth no-fat homemade yogurt. This yogurt is still a low cost nutritious food when made from skim milk powder and water, plus a "starter" from the previous batch of homemade yogurt.

The season's end of storage apples is put to use in these and other ways, with other foods. They remind us of summer and fall, so these recipes can be used again then as new crops come in with their fragrance and flavor.

Iron Overdose Warning

CHICAGO (AP) — Many men may be in danger of iron overdose because of excess fortification of foods with iron, the American Medical Association says.

Americans may already have too much iron in their daily diet, a condition that may result in the onset of a hereditary illness called hemochromatosis, an editorial in the May 12 Journal of the American Medical Association said.

The symptoms of hemochromatosis are changes in skin color, diabetes, liver problems and heart failure, the journal said.

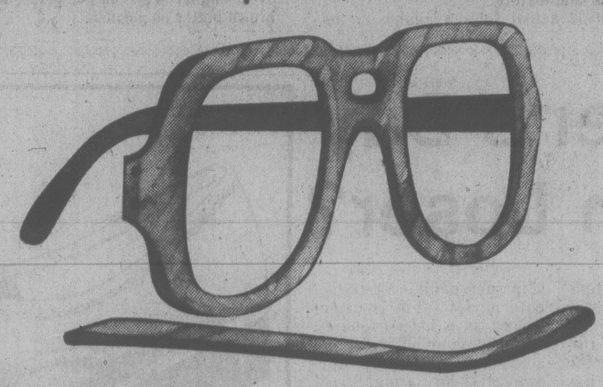

Men are in more danger of iron excess than women because women's bodies excrete substantial quantities of iron during menstruation, the journal said. Most iron additives in food are aimed at restoring iron lost by women in monthly bleeding.

By L. L. COLEMAN, M.D.

Living as I do in a world of hospitals, it is particularly exciting to share with you a recent experience that was heart-warming in an extraordinary way.

I was first introduced to St. Francis Hospital, in Roslyn, N. Y., by Joseph D'Angelo who is actively involved and dedicated to the growth of this remarkable institution.

I was deeply impressed with the excellent medical and surgical facilities that identify this fine hospital as a leading centre for heart surgery. But that which impressed me even more was the warmth, devotion and dedication that seemed to permeate the entire hospital.

The personnel — doctors, nurses and paramedics — working as a consolidated team, radiated the kindness, security and hope so essential for the ultimate recovery of their patients.

Many hospitals all over North America are discovering that an atmosphere of caring and concern for the patient, in a personal kind of way, gives enormous sustenance to the patients and to their families. It is happening more and more that these fine canyons of steel and marble are showing heart, in addition to their great medical and surgical achievements.

This is what I saw at St. Francis Hospital. I thought you'd like to know about it.

My wife has just had a serious operation, leaving her with a colostomy opening. She handled the operation well, but she's having a terrible time with this artificial opening. What can we do to help her? — Mr. E. T.

Dear Mr. T.:

A colostomy opening is made by the surgeon when a portion of the large intestine is removed. It is through this new opening that bowel movements take place because there is no longer the normal rectal opening.

Thousands of people are now alive and functioning well with colostomies. Many of them would have succumbed to cancerous growths and other serious conditions of the large bowel had such extensive surgery not been done.

It is completely understandable that your wife is at first reacting so severly to life with a new outlet on the abdominal wall. Yet surgeons are always amazed at how quickly the colostomy patient falls on the inner reserve and courage, and continues to function in dignity and with accomplishment.

With your support, and with your doctor's psychological and medical guidance, your wife will soon regain her equanimity.

Dilly Shrimp

2 lbs. fresh frozen deveined, large shrimp
2 tbsp. chopped onion
1½ cup dry white wine (OR ⅜ cup dry sherry and ⅜ cup water)

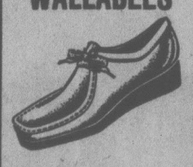

Sauce:
½ cup butter or margarine
⅜ cup flour
2 cup hot milk
2 tbsp. dill seeds
¼ tsp. salt.

In top of double boiler over boiling water melt the butter or margarine and stir in flour and salt until blended. Stir in hot milk and dill seeds and stir until very thick. Cover and set aside.

Into a large pot tip the slightly thawed shrimp, onion and wine. Bring to boil and simmer 5 minutes or until shrimps are barely cooked. Do not overcook. Remove from heat and gently stir in the thick sauce until all is soothly blended. Return to medium heat and stir gently and constantly until heated through. Serve in preheated chafing dish or large serving dish. You could serve it over brown rice BUT the shrimp mixture is thick enough to serve beside the rice.

DEAR ABBY: I am a retired coal miner, now 82, and believe it or not, I can still read without eyeglasses. I don't remember when I first started to read DEAR ABBY, but it has now become a very important part of my life.

Will you please do me a favor and settle a lengthy and heated disagreement I have been having with a good friend of mine named Curly. Curly says that you do not personally write your own column or answer your mail. He claims you have assistants and secretaries do it for you. I say that you do all your own writing. Anyway, we have a $10 wager, so please let me know who is right.

GARY AURITT

DEAR GARY: You are. I have a staff of devoted secretaries who are expert typists (I'm not). They do the research and handle referrals, but every line published under my name is written by me!

Collect the $10 from Curly, but be careful how you spend it, Gary, because I don't want to be responsible for contributing to the delinquency of a miner.

DEAR ABBY: When my son was married 12 years ago, I gave him my wedding ring to give to his bride. She wore it for 10 years, then she put it away because my son gave her a beautiful set of rings with diamonds for her 10th wedding anniversary.

Three months ago, my son and his wife started divorce proceedings, and I asked my son to get my wedding ring back. He told me he had already asked his wife for it but she wouldn't give it up. She said it was HERS — regardless of where it came from. Finally I called and told her there was a lot of sentiment attached to that ring and I wanted it back.

She then had the nerve to say that she also attached a lot of sentiment to the ring and refused to part with it.

How can I get it back and what should I do now?

BOILING POINT

DEAR BOILING: Your son GAVE the wedding ring to her, therefore it's hers. And I see no way for you to get it back if she doesn't want to part with it. The word from here is, simmer down and give up.

DEAR ABBY: My 13-year-old sister has this crazy thing about germs. If someone coughs or sneezes near her, she holds her breath or runs out of the room.

If someone touches her food, she won't eat it. She sterilizes her toothbrush every time she uses it. She won't use a towel if anyone else has touched it. When we go anywhere, she won't touch doorknobs or railings with her bare hands because they're "germy."

WORRIED

DEAR WORRIED: Your sister has an obsessive "phobia" (fear) about germs. It is not uncommon, but her chances of "outgrowing it" are slim. Please urge your parents to take her to a psychiatrist. With treatment, her phobia can be removed.

Large Meals Cause Diabetes

VANCOUVER — One of the major contributing factors in the increase of diabetes among Canadians is the common habit of eating a large evening meal, according to Dr. John Hunt of Lions Gate Hospital.

The Vancouver consulting physician told a nutrition seminar that while the cause of diabetes is primarily genetic, excessive calorie intake, obesity, lack of exercise, use of refined sugars and consumption of large meals, particularly in the evening, put strain on the body's energy storage and thus can lead to diabetes.

Dr. Hunt said that there are more than 400,000 known diabetics in Canada and an estimated additional 200,000 who are afflicted but are not aware of it. "It is becoming an increasingly common condition and we are all potential candidates," he added.

The speaker suggested an ideal meal plan to follow would be one that provides several smaller, well balanced meals over the course of a day. More calories would be consumed during active daytime hours and less, at night, when activity is low.

"Many Canadians eat half their total daily calorie intake at night," he noted. "This meal could be high in carbohydrates which are converted by the body into glucose and normally stored in the blood stream to provide energy. But this large amount of glucose consumed at night is too much for the blood to store and must be stored elsewhere. The body must then release the glucose slowly from these other storage areas to provide energy for periods as long as 18 hours, if the person who eats a large meal at night omits breakfast."

THEY HATE TO SEE HIM COMING

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — It's unlikely you've ever heard of Bobby (Brutus) Paxton unless you happen to own a Memphis restaurant, in which case you might wish you hadn't heard of him.

"Eating is my claim to fame," Paxton said Friday between meals.

He claims to have cleaned one restaurant out of its all-you can-eat special, and when it comes to eating contests, it is usually no contest when Paxton shows up.

"I get my money's worth," Paxton, who is 33 years old, 6-feet-5 and 260 pounds.

He recalled that last year, he attended a hot dog eating contest, complete with a $100 first prize.

Two hours and 29 hot dogs later, Paxton was $100 richer.

Study Links Lead Levels and IQ

WASHINGTON (WP) — A study of 116 Boston children found that children with "slightly elevated" levels of lead in their bodies scored significantly lower on intelligence tests than children with lower lead levels.

According to the recently completed study by Harvard psychiatrist Herbert Neddleman, children with blood-lead levels well below the range of classic lead poisoning had an average IQ of 102.3 while a carefully matched group of children with even lower lead levels had an average IQ of 108.8.

The significance of the Neddleman study is that it determines, apparently for the first time, that there is a definite correlation between low levels of lead previously considered safe and poor performance on intelligence tests.

"There have been seven or eight studies" of the same question, said Neddleman, "most of which were flawed. I and my colleagues attempted to address what were those basic design problems and we've demonstrated neurological differences in children with higher levels of lead in the bodies. The results may be important in terms of school function."

Because lead, which can find its way into the body in the form of paint chips, air pollution or lead-laden dust, eventually is deposited in the bones, collecting baby teeth when they come out naturally is the simplest way of studying the long-term buildup of lead in children.

The children in the study's two groups were carefully matched: They were of similar birthweight, almost all whites, evenly divided between males and females, of the same birth order, had the same number of childhood immunizations and hospitalizations, were the same age — 7 years and 2 months — and almost 80 percent came from two-parent families.

In addition, the mothers of the children in the two groups had similar IQs, gave birth to their children at the same age, had the same number of pregnancies and were rated equal on a widely used scale to determine socio-economic status. The only thing that differed was the amount of lead in the children's teeth and blood.

Man's World. . .? Not Any Longer!

ATLANTA (UPI) — Male dominance is rapidly becoming a thing of the past, according a report to the American Psychiatric Association by two researchers.

There are still a lot of "knuckle bars" in the South where males regularly stage fights to determine the pecking order within the bars, they said. "However, this behavior is now proscribed and may lead to criminal penalties," the researchers said.

The two researchers, Dr. Jacqueline Bowls, of Georgia State University, and Charlotte Tatro, of Florida International University, said men have significantly fewer arenas in which to display dominance and power.

They said "current male fascination with power, both physical and political, may be attributed to their concern with that dimension of their traditional role."

"The poignancy of male needs to be strong, independent and autonomous are vividly illustrated by the anecdote reported by Woodward and Bernstein about President Nixon," they said. "Kissinger was a witness to his emotional breakdown; yet Nixon asked Kissinger not to tell anyone of the incident: 'Tell them I was strong.'"

The reseachers said male activity in the field of the erotic also is curtailed; men are less frequently the pursuers and more often the pursued.

They said men also are limited in the amount and quality of the sheer physicial activity they can engage in. The male body has been replaced by the machine and the majority of American men perform work that phsycially could be done by women.

The researchers said some psychiatrists see androgyny — the integration of masculine and feminine sentiments, behaviors and temperaments in one individual — increasing as women are employed outside the home and demand equal employment opportunities.

But they said studies indicate the blurring of sexual roles may be more apparent than real and that distinct differences still remain between male and female. They predicted men will resist androgyny more than women.

PRIESTLY SWINDLE

BALTIMORE (Reuter) — A Roman Catholic priest was sentenced Tuesday to 18-months probation for misappropriating $2.2 million in charitable contributions.

In exchange for a guilty plea by Very Rev. Guido Carcich, former chief fund raiser of the Pallottine Fathers Catholic missionary order, the state dropped 60 other counts of the indictment.

Father Carcich, 58, had been accused of keeping secret bank accounts through which he engaged in millions of dollars worth of real estate development ventures using money contributed to help the needy overseas.

Kremlin 'Willing to Talk'

BONN (Reuter) — West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said in a television interview Tuesday night that the Soviet Union is willing to negotiate on the question of its medium-range nuclear missiles.

He had been given this assurance by Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev during talks in West Germany last week, he added.

The chancellor said Brezhnev had told him the Kremlin is willing to debate with the West the issue of weapons which were not under discussion at the U.S.—Soviet Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT) or the multilateral East-West troop-reduction talks in Vienna.

This so-called "grey zone" includes medium-range missiles, which the Soviet Union has aimed at targets in Western Europe, Schmidt said.

The Bonn government has called on the Soviet Union to respond to U.S. President Carter's decision to postpone production of the neutron bomb by withdrawing some of its tanks or SS—20 medium-range rockets it has stationed along West Germany's eastern borders.

Schmidt described as remarkable a clause in the joint West German-Soviet declaration signed during Brezhnev's visit, which said that "approximate equality and parity suffice to insure defence."

"We have not heard this from the Soviets' mouth before," the chancellor said. He added that he expects this development to give a new impetus to the Vienna talks, at which Western countries have been demanding that NATO and the Warsaw pact countries accept the principle of approximate manpower parity in Central Europe for both alliances.

He said he telephoned Carter to inform him about the results of the Soviet leader's four days of talks in West Germany.

Passenger Train Cut Urged In U.S.

WASHINGTON (WP) — The U.S. Department of Transportation has recommended a sharp cutback in the Amtrak railroad passenger system to prevent Amtrak's deficit from soaring to $1 billion by 1984.

The reduced system advocated by DOT would serve the nation's 36 largest cities and 160 metropolitan areas, but would raise to eight the number of states without passenger service.

DOT said the new network would serve 90 per cent of Amtrak's passengers with two-thirds of its track.

The changes would not affect service in the Northeast Corridor.

Calling the decision to drop passenger service, "a political hot potato," DOT secretary Brock Adams said, "I'm trying very hard to avoid third degree burns from it."

Unless the Amtrak system is pruned from the current 27,000 miles to about 18,900 miles, the government subsidies needed to keep the trains running will reach $1 billion by 1984, Adams said.

Even the curtailed rail network will require $800 million in subsidies by that date. The fiscal 1977 deficit was $529 million.

Forecasting the need for permanent federal subsidies for Amtrak, Adams said the government may have to take a greater role in running the system. Amtrak now is governed by a 13-member board with nine government representatives, but is not directly responsible to the DOT.

BRITAIN BOOSTS INTEREST RATES

LONDON (Reuter) — Britain's main banks announced Tuesday they were raising their interest rates in line with last Friday's 1.25-per-cent rise in the Bank of England's key minimum lending rate to 8.75 per cent.

The Lloyds, Midland, Barclays and National Westminster groups said they had decided on a 1.5-per-cent rise in base rates on loans to nine per cent. Interest on deposits went up to six per cent from four per cent.

Last week's increase was the second MLR rise in under a month and was designed to support the British pound.

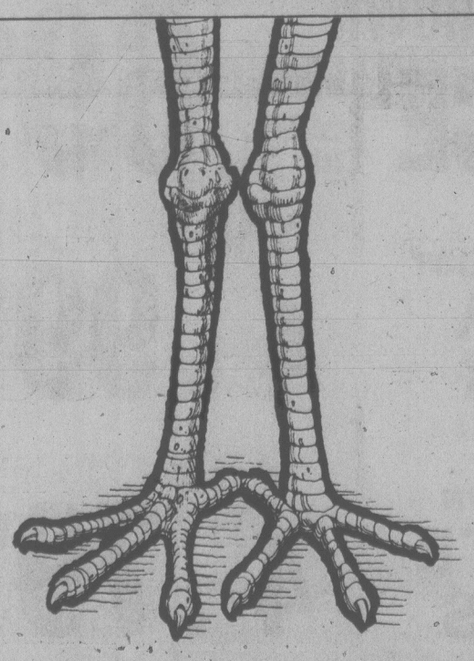

U.S. Tightening SIN Card Rules

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Department of Health, Education and Welfare is tightening up on the issuance of Social Security cards.

Starting May 15, even young native-born Americans will have to send in copies of birth or baptismal certificate, drivers licenses or other supporting documents to prove they are entitled to a card.

Arafat Gives Peace Vow

BEIRUT (AP) — Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) pledged today to try to prevent radical guerrillas from attacking UN forces in southern Lebanon.

Mahmoud Labadi, spokesman for the PLO high command, said the PLO's official policy is "peaceful coexistence" with the UN peacekeeping force.

He was asked to comment on Tuesday' clash between radical Moslems and Norwegian members of the UN force in the foothills of Mount Hermon. One guerrilla was killed and three were wounded in the clash, and a Norwegian lieutenant was shot in the leg.

Right-wing Beirut newspapers said the incident — the first time Norwegian troops have fired back although they have been shot at on several occasions — was tantamount to a declaration of a Palestinian war agaist the UN peace force.

"This is untrue," Labadi said. "There will never be a Palestinian-UN war. Our policy is to do our utmost to curb unruly elements in the field and prevent any escalation."

Two French troops and one Senegalese soldier were killed last week after radical Moslems ambushed a French patrol. Twelve French soldiers were wounded in that incident.

Crucial Votes Looming On Mideast Plane Deals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Committees in both the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate may cast crucial votes on President Carter's proposed Middle East plane sale on Thursday as opponents to the deal still say administration concessions are vague and offer little for a compromise.

But a White House aide, who asked not to be named, says the administration still hopes to win approval of the sale from the House international relations committee. The committee's chairman, Clement Zablocki (Dem. Wis.), said he expects approval.

Both the House and the Senate must adopt resolutions rejecting the sales by May 28 if Congress is to block the deal. The refusal of Zablocki's committee to adopt such a resolution is seen as a key to victory for Carter's proposed sales to Saudi Arabia, Egypt and Israel.

If his committee has finished hearings on the matter by Thursday, Zablocki says he wants a vote that afternoon.

The Senate foreign relations committee is set to vote on the plane sales at noon Thursday.

Senate opponents said State Secretary Cyrus Vance discussed a compromise on Tuesday that would give more planes to Israel in the future. He has said in public testimony that some opponents to the sales have suggested that a compromise should include in the future 20 more F-15 fighters for Israel.

Meanwile, Defence Secretary Harold Brown sent the senators a letter spelling out Saudi Arabian assurances that its planes would not be used against Israel.

Brown's letter is reported to have said the Saudis have agreed that they would take planes only with defensive missiles that cannot be used against ground troops.

The Saudis also have agreed to station their jet fighters far from Israel's borders and not to buy planes from other countries during the time the U.S. planes are being delivered.

Carter wants to sell Saudi Arabia 60 sophisticated F-15 jet fighters, Israel 75 F-16s and 15 F-15s and Egypt 50 F-5Es.

The sales may go ahead unless Congress vetoes them by May 28.

Brown's letter was turned over to the Senate committee Tuesday afternoon, but opponents told reporters afterwards they were not satisfied.

Republican Senators Clifford Case of New Jersey and Jacob Javits of New York were among senators who said they cannot accept Carter's concessions now. They said, however, they still hope for a compromise.

Israeli Victims Honored

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel paused in its 30th birthday preparations Tuesday to spend a solemn 24 hours remembering the 15,000 soldiers killed in the wars for the creation and survival of the state.

Memorial candles flickered in thousands of homes to honor the victims of four wars, countless border skirmishes and Arab terrorism within and beyond Israel's borders.

President Ephraim Katzir kindled a flame at Jerusalem's Wailing Wall, Judaism's holiest shrine, in a 15-minute ceremony broadcast live to the country.

Air raid sirens sounded for one minute throughout the country, bringing traffic to a halt and Israelis to their feet for a moment of silent reflection.

N-Plant Protests Expected In Wash.

OLYMPIA (CP) — Nuclear power plant operators must expect and prepare for demonstrators, including violent ones, says the Washington Public Power Supply System.

The consortium of public utility districts and city power companies is building plants at Hanford in eastern Washington and Satsop in Grays Harbor County. It outlined, in broad terms, its security plans at a meeting of the Energy Facility Site Evaluation Council.

Security is needed primarily to protect against release of excess radioactivity and to prevent theft of nuclear materials, either by "a trained group of armed outsiders or a knowledgeable insider, including plant employees," said a statement prepared by security chief Jack Shannon.

The supply system will use sophisticated electronic security systems, screen employees and contractors before allowing unescorted access to the plants, escort visitors at all times and hire specially-trained security guards, he said.

Nuclear plant operators can expect peaceful demonstrations, non-violent protests which try to halt the operation, and violent demonstrations "with the intent to not only stop the activity they are protesting, but also to do physical damage to facilities and-or persons," he said.

Trade Secrets Stolen?

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Mitsubishi International of Japan, four former Mitsubishi officials and a former official of the Celanese Corp. were indicted by a federal grand jury Tuesday for conspiracy and stealing trade secrets.

The defendants were charged with plotting to divert a secret formula for Celanese polyester base film from Greer, S.C., where Celanese is based, through California to Japan.

Indicted were Harold Farrar, former manufacturing manager of Celanese; Mitsubishi; and Laurence Lueck, president of the now-defunct Nichibei Technical Consultants, Ltd., of Tokyo and Los Angeles.

Pigs Jogged for Nothing

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — At least for pigs, jogging 40 kilometres a week does not reduce the risk of heart attack, even when it trims body fat, a University of California study indicated Tuesday.

The results of two years of experiments are disappointing to those who feel jogging helps humans avoid heart attacks, researcher Max Sanders said.

"The findings caused a great deal of anguish" among his colleagues who are dedicated joggers, he said.

In a paper to be published this summer, Sanders and several colleagues said a specialized breed of miniature pigs called Yucatan miniswine ran on treadmills—about 40 kilometres a week—for a year.

They were conditioned earlier on a small track on a private farm northeast of San Diego and in all, lost up to 20 per cent of their body weight.

The scientists injected tiny radioactive beads into major blood vessels and plotted in detail the circulation work which supplies oxygen to the heart. The pigs' circulation pattern proved to be no better than that of research pigs permitted to be sedentary, Sanders said in an interview Tuesday.

In humans and pigs, clogged arteries that inhibit circulation can result in damage to the heart's muscle tissue and perhaps death. It had been widely believed that jogging cut down on the possibility of clogged arteries. In a related exercise, researchers blocked arteries that supply the heart in 18 animals. The resulting dead tissue is called a myocardial infarction, representing permanent damage to the heart muscle.

After blocking arteries in the pigs, the scientists found the pigs did develop alternative pathways that allowed the blood supply to bypass the dead tissue if they survive the heart attacks. One of the 18 pigs died after surgery.

Sanders said many exercise therapists believe such alternative pathways can be developed through exercise in normal animals, thus reducing the risk of heart attacks. But that was untrue in the pigs.

However, the heart efficiency of the pigs, weighing about 150 pounds when the workouts began, was improved by the regimen, he said.

A more strenuous program similar to the kind done by long-distance runners might result in development of alternative blood pathways in pigs but that is too difficult an experiment to carry out, Sanders added.

Rioters Rampage In Iran

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Nine people were killed and hundreds more injured in rioting that broke out for the second day today in the holy city of Qom, one of 23 Iranian cities torn by political violence recently, newspapers reported.

The government condemned the "inhuman and anti-national acts" of the demonstrators and warned that its patience was not unlimited.

Reports from Qom said the rioters ran through the streets for 10 hours Tuesday burning shops, fighting police, stopping trains, smashing buses and roughing up passengers.

At one point, a group of rioters attacked a police station and officers opened fire on them, the reports said.

The trouble began about noon when dissidents carrying red flags emerged from a mosque and set fire to a hotel and several shops, they said, then set up barricades of barrels and logs to prevent fire engines from reaching the burning buildings.

The Persian-language Tehran newspaper Ettela'at said nine people were killed in the violence.

U.S. Approves Elephant Slaughter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. interior department decided Tuesday that African elephants are not endangered, a move some animal protectionists say spells doom for the world's largest land mammal.

"It's a grey day for elephants," said Craig Van Note of the protectionist organization Monitor. "This decision gives no incentive to African countries to preserve elephant populations."

African elephant numbers have radically declined in recent years due to widespread drought, poaching and loss of habitat. The interior department estimates between one million and 1.4 million survive today.

The declining populations prompted the department to classify the animal as threatened, meaning that protective safeguards are necesary to protect the species from possible extinction.

Under the decision announced Tuesday, ivory imports will be permitted only from nations that have signed the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora.

The convention is designed to prevent the worldwide smuggling of endangered animals.

But Van Note said "legal and illegal ivory will continue to pour into the United States" because ivory smugglers circumvent the convention's restrictions that the ivory be legally taken.

Entire Year's Cars Recalled by AMC

Times News Services

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. — American Motors Corp. said Tuesday it plans to recall up to 310,000 vehicles — all of the 1976 production in the United States — for inspection of a back-pressure sensor in the exhaust gas recirculation value system.

AMC, which did not disclose the cost of the recall, last February had recalled 157,500 of these vehicles, but said that an investigation since then indicated up to 153,000 more vehicles should be examined.

AMC said in a statement "the brazed joint of a sensing tube attached to the back-pressure sensor may have broken, although the condition has no noticeable effect on engine performance or safety."

Repairs will be made a no expense to owners.

In Brampton, Ont., a spokesman for American Motors (Canada) Ltd. said today the United States recall won't affect cars sold in Canada.

The AMC spokesman here said Canadian cars are not subjected to the same emission control standards as in the U.S. "and we don't have the same hardware on our cars as they do."

Safety Defects Probed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal safety specialists announced today they are investigating three General Motors car models for possible safety defects.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration also said it is investigating a front brake problem in Dodge heavy-duty vans, failures of trailer wheels made by Broad Wheels Co. and a brake problem in Ford heavy trucks.

The GM models involve the 1975 Chevrolet Monzas with V-8 engines, Oldsmobile Starfires and Buick Skylarks and centres on front wheel-bearing failures which may damage or break the wheel spindles. If the spindle breaks, the wheel can separate from the car.

Boeing Lands Biggie From a Tiny Airline

NEW YORK (UPI) — The largest order for commercial aircraft in U.S. history — from one of the world's smallest international airlines, has been landed by Boeing Co.

In an unprecedented near-billion-dollar deal, announced Tuesday, Singapore Air Lines has ordered 19 Boeing jets for a major expansion that will include trans-Pacific passenger service to the United States.

The order for 13 Boeing 747 jumbos and six 727 short-haul jets will cost almost $900 million, more than double the total revenues last year of the tiny but extremely successful government-owned airline.

The new 747s will be the heaviest, most powerful jumbo jets ever built by Boeing and will replace and expand SIA's fleet of seven 747s.

By the end of 1980 the average age of the airline's aircraft will be one year, making it one of the world's most modern fleets.

The order will provide a tremendous boost for Boeing and for the Pratt & Whitney division of United Technologies Corp. that will provide advanced engines capable of trans-Pacific flights with heavy payloads.

Financing details were not disclosed but were described as "unique."

Both the Singapore government and the airline are said to have substantial funds available for the long-planned expansion.

The U.S. Export-Import Bank, which is active in the sale of U.S. aircraft to foreign buyers, also might be expected to assist the deal with credit or loan guarantees but a bank spokesman in Washington said Tuesday the bank had not been approached about the transaction.

SIA managing director Lim Chin Beng and chairman J. Y. M. Pillay, credited in aviation circles with innovative management in building SIA since it split with the former Malaysia-Singapore Airlines in 1972, were in New York for the announcement with Boeing chairman T. A. Wilson. They could not be reached for comment.

Whalers Warned

REYKJAVIK (Reuter) — Two representatives of the Greenpeace Foundation said Monday they will obstruct Icelandic whaling operations in June and appealed to the government to halt all whaling for 10 years. Allan Thornton and Rene Parmentier said the stock of fin whales is declining and that Greenpeace members in rubber boats would position themselves between the hunters and the whales.

CANADA URGES OIL FREEZE

OTTAWA (CP) — Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie said Tuesday he intends to urge the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to forego any increase in world oil prices this year.

Gillespie said Canada's position will be made clear to the major producers through the ambassadors in the exporting countries.

The economies in the western consuming nations have not yet recovered from the sharp jump in oil prices that started in 1973, Gillespie said.

"This is a time to get the economies moving, not to set them back again," the minister said.

OPEC ministers indicated following an informal meeting in Taif, Saudi Arabia, last week that the world oil glut may force them to reluctantly forego any increase in 1978.

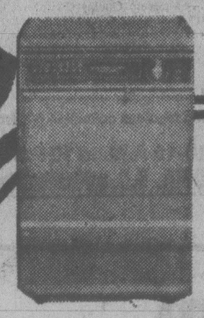

But a decision on pricing isn't expected before the formal session of OPEC ministers scheduled for Geneva June 17.

Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi oil minister, is reported to have told his OPEC colleagues an oil price increase might not be wise for three or four years.

Gillespie said that "many responsible voices within OPEC" had argued against an increase at this time.

But others among the major producing countries say that their oil is being sold in terms of United States dollars, which are declining in value against other currencies. They argue that an increase should be imposed to account for losses in currency changes.

Royal Trust to Stay in Que.

Royal Trust Co. will keep its headquarters in Montreal unless pressure from the Parti Quebecois government becomes intolerable, president Kenneth White said in Victoria Tuesday.

"We have to operate in English, but hopefully we can meet any conditions they put upon us. We are not eager to leave Montreal."

A move is not totally out of the question, however, White said.

Forcing the company to use French-only might represent an intolerable strain and if the pressure becomes severe, the company might find it more convenient to operate from another city.

Royal Trust has had its headquarters in Montreal for 78 years and no hasty action would be taken to change.

But while White hopes there won't have to be a change in headquarters, he says he wouldn't mind seeing a change in Quebec's government.

All the talk about separation is harming the Canadian economy, he said.

In addition, the Parti Quebecois is clearly socialist and this is not helping the internal economy of Quebec.

Rene Levesque kept a low profile on his socialist views during the election campaign, White said.

White was in Victoria briefly following a visit to Vancouver.

He said Canada is in the last stages of its recession and better times are ahead. The real estate market is slack but it is always subject-ed to wild swings. It will get stronger soon.

White said mortgage interest rates look stable. If there is to be a small increase it would be soon but otherwise the rate should stay level for much of the year.

He said his military training (he was a lieutenant-colonel with the Toronto Scottish in the Second World War) taught him to stay out and fight when times got tough.

"One of the things you don't do is crawl into a hole and pull a door over your head.

"When you pull a door over you, you don't know what's going on outside. If you want to defend a position in war, you don't sit in the position. You get on a hill on the other side and watch the position you want to defend.

"But if you crawl into a hole, you won't know when it's time to come out. If you think there's a depression, you should get to work, not withdraw, and try to prevent it."

Uranium Price-Fix Survival- Gillespie

OTTAWA (CP) — A cartel of world uranium producers that led to criminal charges Tuesday against Gulf Oil Corp. has been an irritant in relations between Ottawa and Washington for more than a year.

While the U.S. justice department and Congressional committees investigated the agreements for proof of price fixing, Canadian government officials defended the deal as necessary to protect its mining industry.

"It was a question of survival for the Canadian uranium mining industry," Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie said Tuesday of the international agreement.

He made the comments after hearing that the U.S. justice department had filed charges of conspiring to fix prices on imported uranium against Gulf in Pittsburgh, location of the firm's head office.

The charges allege that Gulf participated in a Canadian-based international cartel from 1972 through 1974 with other uranium producers.

The entire affair drew angry words on both sides of the border in the last 18 months as U.S. investigators attempted to get evidence from a Gulf subsidiary, Gulf Minerals Canada Ltd., and from the Canadian parents of two U.S. firms.

Ottawa protested it amounted to attempting to impose U.S. laws in Canada and passed regulations forbidding transfer of documents relating to the cartel from the country. But some already had been sent by Gulf Minerals to its parent and were obtained by the investigators.

For a while, at the height of the investigations, top Canadian government officials, including the then deputy energy minister, Gordon MacNabb, travelled on a diplomatic passport when visiting Washington to stymie any attempt tn involve them in the investigation.

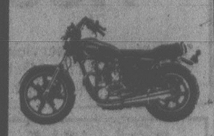

No Canadian firm had been charged by the justice department as far as they knew.

The whole affair results from actions taken in 1972, when government spokesman say the U.S. closed its border to uranium imports, throwing the rest of the world market into turmoil.

A cartel—Ottawa prefers to call it a marketing arrangement—was formed with firms from France, South Africa and Australia to divide up the rest of the market and set minimum prices.

The regulations were withdrawn in early 1975.

Keenan Rakes $½M Study of McMicking

B.C.'s former director of pollution control Charles Keenan says the proposed expenditure of nearly half a million dollars on environmental studies of the McMicking Point sewage outfall will serve no purpose other than to help educate a few misguided academics.

Dr. Derek Ellis of the University of Victoria's biology department has been appointed co-ordinator of a three-year monitoring program on the outfall.

He told a technical committee meeting last week that half of the $560,000 would be spent in the first year before the outfall is built. The remainder would be spent in the next two years, monitoring the shoreline for pollution.

"It must come as a blow to the johnny-come-lately ecofreaks to find out that engineers have for generations been building outfalls into the sea without their naive interence," said Keenan.

"As a result the practical knowledge available is extemsive."

A former senior partner in Ker, Priestman and Associates, Keenan maintains answers to questions on sewage disposal in oceans are available and need only intelligent reading and appropriate experience to abstract them.

Five Die in Blaze

MOUNT VERNON, Va. (AP) — Five persons were killed and a dozen others injured in a motel fire Tuesday in this community south of Washington, D.C. Fire officials said three persons were found dead at the Brooks' Motor Lodge and two more were dead on arrival at hospital.

7 Facing Move

Greater Victoria school board will transfer seven elementary school vice-principals to other schools in the district this fall.

Vice-principals who will move in September are:

Peter McKay, from Monterey to Doncaster; Robert George from Doncaster to Tillicum; Gordon Mason, from Quadra to Oakland; Keith Palmer, from Tillicum to Fairburn; William Abbott, from Oakland to Monterey; Leslie Thomas from Craigflower to Quadra and Henry Hooge, who becomes the vice-principal at Craigflower after a leave of absence.

In addition, the board has appointed Morris Preece principal of S.J. Willis Junior Secondary and David Petrie vice-principal of the school.

Dr. David Turkington has been appointed assistant to the principal at Lambrick Park Secondary.

Board Offices To Burnside

Greater Victoria school board has decided to sell its administrative centre on Foul Bay Road and move into a district-owned warehouse which will be renovated for about $500,000.

The warehouse, opposite Burnside elementary school, is being phased out as the district's supply storage facility.

The building has 5,413 square feet of space, board chairman Susan Brice said today.

The district will move its operations lock stock and barrel to the new facility by either January or September 1979, Brice said.

The Paul Building and media centre now occupied by the district will be sold or leased. The complex is valued at roughly $3 million, she said.

Camosun College has indicated it would like to purchase the complex if it can get the neccessary funds from the education ministry.

The move was recommended in a brief submitted to the board by superintendent Allan Stables.

Saanich Still Off Bikes

Although the joint Victoria-Saanich committee which administers Mount Douglas Park will review its recent decision to cancel the Victoria Motorcycle Club's annual hill climb, a majority of Saanich council members indicated Tuesday night they believe the answer should still be no.

After a full discussion of the club's appeal against the earlier decision, council's parks and recreation committee referred the matter back to the Mount Douglas park committee with accompanying poll results of Saanich opinion.

The latter informal vote showed Mayor Mel Couvelier, Ald. Geoff Vantreight and Ald. Robert Cameron in favor of allowing the hill climb in the park, with four other aldermen — Howard Sturrock, Ian Cass, John Mika and David Paterson — opposed. Committee chairman Ald. Fred Severson and Ald. Mary Casilio were absent.

Sturrock, the chairman of the Victoria-Saanich Mount Douglas park committee, said he welcomed the indication of council thinking, and he would also appreciate receiving the views of park users and the public before he calls another meeting to reconsider the club's application.

Sturrock noted that although the committee had granted the club permission to stage the fall event in 1977, the approval was on the understanding that the club would try to find another, more suitable, course for this year.

He stressed the problem of environmental damage to the park is not caused by club members themselves, who are responsible and run a well-organized event.

It rests more on the fact that the bylaw prohibiting motorcycling in the park is suspended for that one day, he explained.

"All other riders feel they should have an equal opportunity to try the hill at some subsequent time, and the result is that parks staff spend the next four or five months trying to remove them."

Both Vantreight and Cameron spoke strongly in favor of allowing the hill climb to be held, citing the club's responsible attitude and its reputation in the community.

Parks Report 'Fluff'

A two-page memorandum from Saanich parks and recreation director Bill Young, advancing several possible explanations for a slump in attendance at the municipality's recreational facilities, was termed a "ball of fluff" by Mayor Mel Couvelier Tuesday night.

Couvelier told the parks and recreation committee that he was implying no criticism of the director or his department, but he was looking for a more substantial report — "something I can get my teeth into."

He suggested, and the committee agreed, that Young ask the supervisor of each separate building or centre to submit a detailed report on the situation, containing specific proposals for reversing the downward trend in public skating, swimming and other recreation activities.

Young was asked for his views last month, after submitting his quarterly report for the January-March period which showed a significant slump in attendance and revenues.

Among the factors contributing to the decline, Young cited a drop in school population, the recent opening of the Sidney-North Saanich recreation centre, school budget cutbacks which have reduced the number of school rentals, and the general economic situation in the Greater Victoria area.

Tennis Bubble Okay Nearer

The proposal for an indoor tennis bubble in Saanich is volleying and smashing its way through the last stages of opposition, and now looks almost certain to win formal council approval.

But one of the yet-to-be-convinced council members, Ald. John Mika, persuaded the parks and recreation committee Tuesday night to attach a couple of conditional clauses to the committee's recommendation that the tennis centre be built.

Mika said a straight endorsation of the proposal would be too "open-ended" for his liking. But he accepted an amendment proposed by Ald. Ian Cass that tenders be obtained, and that the cost-liquidating period and other financial data be completed before council considers the committee's recommendation.

Having cleared that hurdle with a unanimous vote, the committee swiftly approved the location for the bubble — a site adjacent to the present Cedar Hill Community Centre. Only Ald. Robert Cameron voted agaainst the latter.

Parks and recreation director Bill Young repeated earlier predictions that the maximum cost of the four-court structure would not exceed $240,000, and that the profitable enterprise would pay for itself in five years.

If the project qualified for the one-third provincial grant, he added, the municipality need borrow only $160,000.

Unless final council approval is stalled for some time, the bubble could be completed and ready for use by the fall.

The Cedar Hill location was considered the most suitable for several reasons. Staff supervision can be provided because it is alongside an existing recreational centre, the site requires minimal preparation, it is well served by transportation and the hub of a dense concentration of population (23,000-plus).

Big Shots Clean Up in Prague

PRAGUE (AP) — Cleaning women and janitors enjoy new status in Czechoslovakia, where an acute labor shortage makes scrubbing floors profitable.

A Prague evening newspaper recently carried a cartoon showing a manager telling an aide: "Remember, everyone in our office can be replaced except the cleaning woman."

The shortage of labor—the government estimates there are 550,000 unfilled jobs in this country of 15 million inhabitants—is encouraging many people to moonlight for extra cash.

A young woman with a degree in engineering says she supplements her monthly salary of 2,500 crowns (about $250) by spending an hour each evening cleaning a government office building. Her additional take: 800 crowns a month.

The average wage in Czechoslovakia is 2,300 crowns.

The new breed of cleaning people do not dawdle and gossip but work as quickly as possible. Often they are paid by the job, not the hour.

"I was flabbergasted when I saw her the first time," an economist said of his new housecleaner. "A distinguished, elegant lady walked in. First she took off her fur coat, then her jewelry.

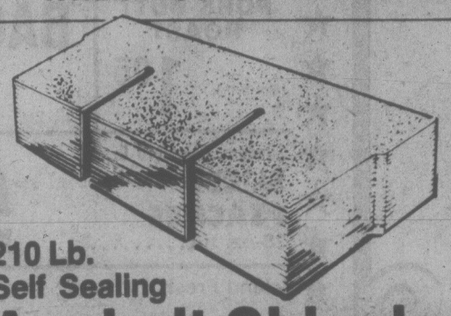

"She stacked the rings and the necklace on a desk, donned a smock, covered her hairdo with a kerchief and went to work."

Afghanistan: Poor and Remote . . . But Vital

By SIMON WINCHESTER
The Guardian

KABUL, Afghanistan — To get an idea of why, despite its economic insignificance and its remoteness, Afghanistan is really a vitally important state, it is only necessary to drive three hours north of Kabul, and up to the world's highest road tunnel at the notorious Salang Pass.

There, at more than 11,000 feet, it is still bitterly cold and the great cliffs of the Hindu Kush are swept with blizzards every day. Thanks to the two-mile tunnel driven through the mountains a decade ago, however, it is now comparatively simple to drive from Kabul up across the mountains and to the southern steppes of Central Asia, in a long, tiring day.

The Russians built the Salang Tunnel. It took them 10 years and it cost about $600 million. Thousands of Afghan laborers keep the roadway from breaking up in the bitter frosts and the winding approach roads free of landslides.

Standing at the entrance to the tunnel and looking south toward the Kabul Valley or north towards Tashkent and Samarkand, it is natural to ask: Why should they spend $600 million on a little-used roadway across the Hindu Klursh? Surely not just for the truckloads of raisins that toil up the pass each day?

Of course the answer is no. The Salang tunnel was built to enable Soviet convoys — military convoys in all probability — to cross from the cities and army bases of Uzbekhistan all the way over the Khyber and to Pakistan. Military men say it is possible to make the journey in a day — meaning that, if they chose, Soviet military commanders could have their tanks rumbling up to Pakistan's Northwest Frontier Province in virtually no time at all.

That they might ever do so is, under present circumstances, almost inconceivable. Yet, it is a fact that Afghanistan's relations with Moscow for the last five years have been good — and now, with Kabul under the leadership of Nur Mohammed Taraki, are likely to get much better. This at least allows the scenario to be considered.

The Salang tunnel symbolizes Afghanistan's importance as a classic buffer state, a land to be driven across, to be flown across (as the Soviets did recently, on their way to help the Ethiopians), even to be gently annexed.

After three wars with the British, every Afghan knows why his country once was important in the tussles between the old empires. After the coup of 10 days ago, every thinking Afghan knows why, once again, he is important in tussles between the descendants of those empires.

This brings up the question of the credentials of Taraki's new government, now relatively well-organized, and recognized by all the powers and neighbors that matter. Will Afghanistan now be reduced to little more than a roadway cafe on the invasion routes south for Russia, or is it true to say, as Taraki insists, that "we are a satellite of no one. This revolution was accomplished on the Afghan model, one which is unique, and all our own."

To begin with, it is necessary to at least take note of one reason why Taraki regards the Western press as unashamedly "imperialists and propagandistic," a reason that goes a long way toward explaining his expressed antipathy to the Western powers.

The press coverage of the Afghan revolution has been — and I take my own share of the blame — fairly appalling. The initial reports sent out from Kabul, of thousands dead, of violent revenge likely to be brought down on tens of thousands more, now appear to be untrue.

It was a bloody coup, without a doubt, but the figures suggested by diplomats based in Kabul, and faithfully passed along by reporters who assumed the diplomatic community actually knew something of the country, were probably wrong by a considerable margin.

The exaggeration, the fault of those of us who perpetrated it and of those embassies who planted the ideas in the very receptive minds of the reporters, triggered angry denials from the new government, denials which some of the more hard-line politicians in the Western capitals might regard as a confirmation of Taraki's political outlook — pro-Soviet and violently anti-capitalist.

My own belief, having listened to Taraki's rather gentle explanations of his seizure of power, is that his views do not support this facile assumption. It seems more probable that the democratic republic, so called, has genuine nonalignment as its aim. Whether the Soviet Union will permit such a posture remains to be seen.

Afghanistan before the coup was a country yearning for revolution. Its deposed monarch's power and influence lingered on under Mohammed Daoud — a man who was brother-in-law to the exiled king. Men like Taraki, and other leftists like Babrak Karmal and the new government's only woman, Dr. Anahita Ratebzad, found Daoud's apparent sympathy for the aristocracy galling. When Taraki was arrested three weeks ago the mood that had been building, for two years according to the new premier, spilled over into military action.

What followed was the ultimate expression of two years of pent-up rage, something which not a single Western embassy seems to have spotted, but which the Indians, to their credit, forecast months ago.

If India understood why the coup took place, it is also offering advice and help to Taraki in his rather confused first days of power. The news conference arranged on Saturday came about after pressure from New Delhi "not to let the West think you've all got three heads," as one Indian put it.

The view from New Delhi that Taraki and his Cabinet colleagues are agrarian reformers, intensely nationalistic and likely to be formidably opposed to direct Soviet intervention, is, in my opinion, a correct assessment.

"Give them six months, and let's see how they shake down," said one Indian. "It is fruitless to make any snap judgments about the Afghans."

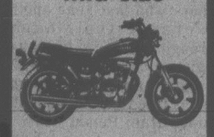

That seems good advice. If Taraki appears to regard the West as mere imperialists, and the Western press as purveyors of propaganda, who can blame him?

If, as seems likely, a long-expected coup took place with relatively little loss of life, and reports in London and Washington speak of butchery and unprincipled Marxist savagery, who can blame him for retiring, hurt and angry, to take counsel with the Russians and the Cubans and the Czechs?

The West should have understood that Afghanistan wants and needs help and support — financial, economic, moral. If Taraki is snubbed on the basis of a snap judgment made in the confused aftermath of the violence, it will be doing him, and the undoubtedly oppressed peoples of an important little land, a grave disservice — a disservice the West may one day regret.

'Clear' Terrorists Suicides

STUTTGART, West Germany (AP) — The Stuttgart prosecutor's office said Tuesday three convicted terrorists found dead in their prison cells after the storming of a hijacked Lufthansa jetliner last Oct. 18 "without doubt" committed suicide.

The prisoners — Andreas Baader, Jan-Carl Raspe and Gudrun Ensslin — were members of West Germany's notorious Baader-Meinhof anarchist group. Leftists contend the three were murdered by West German officials and their deaths were the focus of protests and demonstrations throughout Europe.

Reporting on the findings of a lengthy investigation, a statement said the prosecutor decided to close his files in the case "because it is clear beyond doubt that the prisoners committed suicide or injured themselves in a suicidal manner, respectively."

The prosecutor's report followed a state committee investigation into the deaths which also concluded that the three had committed suicide.

Short Name - Long Fee

MONTREAL (CP) — Satyendranadha Ramakrishna Panda had a big problem, if only a nominal one.

He once laughed when a Canadian immigration official told him his name sounded like "a strange, bacterial disease." But the jokes, mispronunciations and misspellings became a nightmare.

So he joined about 1,600 others who last year applied to change their names through Quebec's bureau of registration. Panda paid $350 in legal and other fees and now is free to use his adopted name—Ram Panda.

But not everyone has a "valid reason" to change names and the bureau rejects about 60 per cent of applications, said bureau official Louise Brochu.

Valid reasons include names that are difficult to pronounce, taking the names of adopted parents, changing a name that "arouses ridicule" and adopting a name that a person has always been called.

"But you cannot change your name on a whim," she said.

Panda, for example, had gradually chipped away at his name since settling in Canada although his first university degree, a bachelor of engineering from McGill in 1971, bore his name with all 30 letters.

"But by the time I received my second degree (a master of business administration in 976), I was smarter," Panda said. "This (name) looks ridiculous, I told myself, and I cut it to Ramakrishna Panda."

As Ram Panda, he now says with a laugh, "I can't get much shorter unless I sign my initials."

A name change can get complicated when an update is required on a series of church documents, passports, school diplomas, licences and other cards and documents with up to four or five versions of a name.

"I got tired of having to prove that I was the same person as was named on my documents," said one name-changer. "It was a mess trying to find another document with exactly the same name to prove that I was one and the same.

"So now I have one pepr (the bureau of registration certificate) that says that all my names are me."

The name-changing process can take two to four months and cost up to $400, depending on the efficiency of the lawyer involved and the alacrity of government bureaucracy.

The application must pass through various Quebec government departments and go to cabinet.

Before that, applicants are required to advertise their intention to change names in the Official Gazette of Quebec and in at least one French-language newspaper in their home town or city.

The announcements must run once a week for two consecutive weeks.

SWEET NOTHINGS are whispered in Bottom the weaver's ear by fairy queen Titania as they rehearse Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream. The beast on the left is really Victoria High student Jamie Straith and the beauty is fellow student Angie Pietarinen. The school will present the play Wednesday, Thursday and Friday at 8 p.m. in the school auditorium. Tickets are available at the door and proceeds go to the B.C. School Drama Conference in Terrace.

AMIN PLOTTER FLEES TO ISRAEL?

TEL AVIV (Reuter) — An Israeli newspaper said Tuesday a Ugandan air force pilot who allegedly plotted to assassinate Ugandan President Idi Amin escaped from a Kampala prison recently and now is in Israel.

The daily Yediot Aharonot said Lieut. Nicodemus Kasuyah, 27, was appointed chief of guard at Entebbe airport after the Israeli commando raid in July 1976 to rescue passengers of an Air France plane seized by Palestinian guerrillas.

With six other officers, he planned a coup against Amin scheduled for last June but security forces were tipped off by an informer and the plotters were captured after a gun fight, the paper said.

Lieut. Kasuyah, who lost a leg following the battle, escaped from prison with the six officers and arrived here last week, it added.

Lieut. Kasuyah's wife and two children are in Kenya, the paper said.

Israeli officials were unable to confirm the report.

Hong Kong's Soaring Growth Slows Down

HONG KONG (Reuter) — After 20 years of almost uninterrupted growth, Hong Kong's export-orientated economy faces a slowdown in the next decade.

The prediction for this year is that the colony's gross domestic product (GDP) will rise by about nine per cent, three per cent less than last year, but still about double the target of most Western countries.

In his recent budget speech, Financial Secretary Philip Haddon-Cave warned that the colony cannot expect to maintain such growth.

The GDP forecast for 1978 is "higher than the rate I believe we can expect to maintain through to the mid-80s," he said.

Some business leaders have forecast that by 1985 Hong Kong will be averaging growth rates of about four to five per cent.

With no natural resources and a negligible home market, Hong Kong's fate is closely tied to the world economy, still recovering from the recession.

Economic analysts see little prospect of an upturn in the world economy in the immediate future and the increasing number of tariffs and quotas being placed on Hong Kong exports, particularly in Europe, is seen as a serious threat, especially to its textile industry.

"This shift to protectionism is most worrying for, after all, textiles and clothing represent about half of Hong Kong's domestic exports," Haddon-Cave said.

But there are also local reasons for a predicted slowdown. He noted that the growth in the working-age population is expected to slow from three to one per cent by the mid-80s. With wages continuing to rise, Hong Kong is likely to become less competitive with its Asian rivals, Taiwan and South Korea.

The Hong Kong dollar, which was the third-strongest currency in the world in 1976, lost some ground last year.

Financially though, Hong Kong still is in a healthy position.

Its fiscal reserves were $1.06 billion U.S. at the end of March, equal to 40 per cent of the government's budget for the coming financial year. In addition, the colony has foreign exchange reserves which in July last year were estimated by informed financial sources at $1.3 billion U.S.

The safety valve of constantly rising standards of living and salaries previously had a stabilizing effect on the Chinese population, highly pressurized by overcrowding, noise and an uncertain future.

But if the economic outlook turns bleak, it might have wide-ranging effects on the community.

For instance, sociologists point to the possible expansion of unions among Hong Kong's work force, increased discontent among the young and a faster talent drain to North America and Europe.

The catchword among government officials and businessmen discussing the future of Hong Kong's economy is "diversification," aimed at dodging rising tariff barriers.

"We can help ourselves by diversifying into products that escape restraint, and that is happening," the colony's governor, Sir Murray Maclehose, said in a speech earlier this year.

Electronics and toys, Hong Kong's two major industries after textiles, have already shown encouraging signs of export growth.

MARK TRAIL

The Bridge Expert

As a general principle, when a declarer is playing some trump contract, he makes haste to gather in the defenders' trumps, lest one of his winners be ruffed. But situations arise where it is incorrect to gather in their trumps immediately. The latter was the case in today's deal.

Neither side vulnerable. South deals.

NORTH
♠ Q J 10 8 7
♡ A 6 3
♣ 7 5 3

WEST
♠ K 5 2
♡ 9 7 4
◇ J 10 9 3
♣ A 6 4

EAST

◇ K Q 8 5 2
♣ J 10 9 8

SOUTH
♠ A 6
♡ K Q J 10 5 2
◇ A 7
♣ K Q 2

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ◇.

East played the diamond queen on West's opening diamond lead, and South won the trick with the ace. South couldn't afford to allow the queen to win, for fear that East would shift to a club (as he would have done). The defenders would then have been en route to winning two club tricks.

Declarer next crashed the king and queen of trumps, East discarding a diamond. If declarer now led another trump to the board's ace, picking up West's remaining trump, he would be entering dummy for the first and last time. He would then take the 50-50 spade finesse, in the hope that East possessed the king.

On this given day, however, West had the spade king. Upon winning with that card, West would exit with a diamond, and eventually declarer would end up losing a diamond, a spade and two clubs.

After cashing the king and queen of trumps, our declarer discontinued playing the trump suit, leaving West with the nine and dummy with the ace. He next laid down the ace of spades, and followed up by leading his remaining spade to West's king. It didn't matter what West now returned, for declarer was home safely. Actually West cashed the club ace, hoping his partner possessed the king, and continued with a club, South's queen winning. South then led a trump to dummy's ace, after which he claimed his contract.

As an aside, this is one of those unusual deals where it is better to have a king rather than an ace. If South had the K-6 of spades instead of the A-6, he would have no option: he would draw only two rounds of trumps, and then lead the spade king.

African Violets on Show

On Saturday May 13, the darling of indoor gardeners has its "day" — the African-violet in all its colorful variety will be shown in competition. Beauty will win, and the judges have no easy task ahead.

This annual show is sponsored by the Victoria African Violet Club, and presented to the public in St. John Ambulance Society Hall at 941 Pandora Avenue, Victoria. Doors will be open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday only.

A point of interest about this show is the number of other potted plants seen on display in the competitive classes. Some visitors may wonder about this, but asking at the information table will bring a logical answer.

The plant known by the common name of African-violet is botanically Saintpaulia ionantha, just one of the many in the mostly tropical plant family of Gesneraids. Included in the family are Achimenes, Episcia, Columnea, Smithiantha and Ramonda.

Of these, only Ramonda has its origin in high cold mountan terrain (Bulgaria) making it possible to grow it outdoors here, with winter protection from rain, not from frost. The remainder are grown as potted plants indoors in North American homes.

Because of their native conditions they take rather kindly to our overheated homes and the rather dry atmosphere. An east facing window during most of the year seems to bring the plants into good growth and bloom.

Gesneraids other than the African-violet may be trailing plants with richly marked leaves in purple, bronze, and pinkish and white, so that as complementary plants in home displays or in public shows, these relatives of the African-violet are wonderful supporters.

Talking with the exhibitors who are seldom far from their plants, the visitor with plant progblems discovers the practical answers. Many exhibitors have less than ideal conditions in the home but must contrive something better if their inclination to grow these exotics is to be realized. Artificial lighting, temperature and humidity control are part of the studies carried out by the ambitious collectors. The experience gained is shared with members of the club which meets regularly each month in the same hall as you visit to see the show this week.

Enquire about membership in the Victoria African Violet Club. It is affiliated with the national Club, which creates wider interest.

The local Club has its own library which gives members access to information not only as to the culture of these delightful plants but also an insight into their history and the modern breeding practices in raising new varieties.

This Saturday, May 13, may be the day you become a more enthusiastic grower of Gesneraids just by visiting the show. Admission is one dollar which includes tea with refreshments in the midst of the plant displays. Talk to anyone you see there, and the talk is likely to be African-violets.

Hydro to Bare All Papers

B.C. Hydro chairman Robert Bonner today told the crown corporations committee investigating the power corporation that all documents, including confidential minutes of board meetings, will be made available to the committee.

Such information, he said, wouldn't be turned over to newspapermen making casual inquiries because Hydro, like any other organization, has need for privacy in policy formation before programs are made public.

But Bonner told the 12-member legislative committee that Hydro is a public company and in his view no information should be withheld from the proper authority.

The relatively new committee, which will be reviewing the four largest Crown corporations, called Hydro to Victoria for questioning at this time largely because of a series of questions put to Bonner by the Vancouver Province newspaper.

Bonner refused to answer the questions from reporters Malcolm Turnbull and Alex Young, so they went to Finance Minister Evan Wolfe who sits on Hydro's board of directors.

He referred the questions to the Crown Corporations Committee, although the committee criticised him for the move.

Bonner today, however, agreed with Wolfe's actions. He said the 50 questions were detailed and complex and if he had been asked what to do with them he said he would have recommended the government have either the committee or a royal commission look into the issues raised.

Bonner said if there is something specific behind the questions then the sooner both Hydro and the public know about it, the better.

To answer those and other questions Hydro has had two dozen people researching the issues — a move Bonner said he wouldn't want to take every time a series of casual questions is put to the Crown corporation.

He also said the questions were unusual in the time span they covered, the details requested and the fact that there was no specific accusation included, only a broad sweep of questions.

The questions mainly concern tendering, Bonner said, which is not only mostly confidential but in cases where contracts are disputed, the issues are so complex that information is not made available to casual persons to draw simplistic conclusions.

Committee chairman Elwood Veitch (SC—Burnaby Willingdon) said in his opening address to the committee that following a general review of Hydro's operations, committee members will specifically question the Duncan, High Arrow, Mica and Peace power projects.

He warned the committee members to listen carefully to Hydro's explanations of its business and to refrain from the tendency to see ourselves as instant experts or Monday morning quarterbacks.

He said the main purpose is to provide a forum to give Hydro officials a chance to respond to the concerns of the committee, and to provide clarification for the public on the issues raised.

$7.75M Esquimalt Budget

A record $7.75 million budget adopted by Esquimalt council is bad news for residential homeowners but good for apartment owners, says Mayor Art Young.

Young said homeowners will face tax hikes of up to 15 per cent as a result of the changeover in January to assessing all properties at true market value.

Young said gross taxes for a home assessed at $70,500 value will be $992 this year, up $78 over last year's $914.

A new house valued at $52,600 will be taxed $645, an increase of $66 over last year, while the owner of an older house of the same value will face a $625 tax bill, up $88.

Apartment owners, however, will get a break. An average size apartment will be taxed about $1,500 less, Young said.

The tax relief for apartment owners stems from the provincial government's decision to tax apartment properties as residential rather than commercial, a difference of about 10 per cent on the tax base.

Young said Greater Victoria is the only area in the province where the decision has created problems for residential homeowners, and suggested the reason might be a tendency of municipal assessors to have over-assessed apartment properties here in the past.

"It could be just a case of us being out of step with everyone else," Young said.

The budget sets a mill rate of 99, which Young said is about three mills lower than last year. It is, he added, the lowest in Greater Victoria. Oak Bay's is 118, Victoria's, 104 and Saanich has adopted a mill rate of 102.

The mill rate for general government, 50.558, is down from last year, but the rates for schools (45.487), hospitals (1.510), and Assessment Authority (1.445) are all up slightly.

Young said that on the whole he is pleased with the budget which he feels holds the line on expenses, but is unhappy with the result of the assessment reclassification of apartments.

He said he intends to bring the matter to the attention of the Union of B.C. Municipalities when it next meets later in the year and urge for a move to put apartments in a separate assessment category of its own, somewhere midway between residential and commercial rates.

Lawyers Lambast Space Lack

Victoria's criminal lawyers voted Tuesday night to condemn the provincial government's failure to provide adequate interview rooms at the Law Courts, 850 Burdett.

A meeting of the Victoria criminal justice sub-section of the B.C. branch of the Canadian Bar Association unanimously passed a resolution expressing its strongest condemnation of the failure of Attorney-General Garde Gardom and his ministry to provide adequate interview facilities at the Law Courts for lawyers and accused persons held in custody.

The sub-section also passed a resolution urging Gardom and his ministry to immediately commence construction of private consultation rooms at the Law Courts.

A sub-section spokesman said the resolutions will be taken to the main criminal justice sub-section in B.C. and to the annual general meeting next week of the Victoria Bar Association.

VBA president Dean Wilson lambasted the government last week for the disgraceful lack of proper facilities.

Wilson said the government had promised three interview rooms but nothing has been done so far.

Fort Rodd Historian

The former extension service officer for the Provincial Museum has been named historian for Fort Rodd Hill Historic Park.

In addition to the appointment of Ronald Lovatt, superintendent Ian MacLean also announced 10 people have been hired as guides for the summer months.

"We expect a large number of visitors this summer," Maclean said.

He said the appointment of qualified historian for the national park is a major step towards unravelling the past history of the fort and the militia of Victoria.

Lovatt is a former British army officer. Before coming to Canada in 1968 he served as a major in the Royal Artillery.

He is well versed on military history and since coming to B.C., has specialized on the militia of the province.

Luxury Trip Past The Sound Barrier

On a recent trip from London to New York, Associated Press writer James Robins, himself a private pilot, flew aboard the supersonic Concorde. He records his experience.

By JAMES ROBINS

ABOARD THE CONCORDE — The supersonic Concorde jetliner seems to be bursting from unwanted earthly shackles as it bounds into the air from the runway.

The four Rolls-Royce engines roar beneath the drooping, delta wings, thrusting the slender aircraft into an abrupt climb, much steeper than the ascent of a subsonic jetliner.

Once airborne, the pilot sharply cuts the power to limit noise as the Concorde moves west over the suburbs of London, jerking nervously like a caged animal during the 330-m.p.h. climb.

Over the Bristol Channel and pointed toward the Atlantic at just under the speed of sound, about 630 m.p.h., the co-pilot announces over the plane's intercom, "Supersonic acceleration commences in 2½ minutes."

There is restlessness among some of the 96 passengers, many of them making their first supersonic flight. One can't help but wonder what it will feel like to break the sound barrier.

Two small shudders rock the plane as the pilot activates the afterburners, adding about 20 per cent more power. A terrific sense of acceleration follows. The back and shoulders press into the seat cushion.

"There we are, ladies and gentlemen," the co-pilot announces, "we're supersonic now." It is exactly 16 minutes after takeoff. A digital display at the front of each of the two cabins reads, "M 1.00." Mach 1. The speed of sound.

The plane continues its acceleration and reaches Mach 1.50 22 minutes after takeoff. It climbs through 14,000 feet at 1,000 m.p.h., and continues to pick up speed.

At this point, another facet of Concorde's luxury commences. Cabin stewards begin pouring champagne and passing out dainty dough shells shaped like canoes and filled with fresh Iranian caviar.

No reaching for the wallet on this flight. Either you or your company already has done that. The one-way fare is about $800, double the cost of an economy-class seat on a standard commercial jetliner.

Somewhere between the asparagus tips vinaigrette and roast lamb, precisely one hour seven minutes after takeoff, Concorde, now well over the Atlantic, reaches Mach 2, about 1,320 m.p.h.

Cruising between 50,000 and 65,000 feet, twice as high as subsonic craft, Concorde now is in its element. The ride is smooth and steady. The engine noise, however, remains noticeably greater than on other jets.

There are no clouds to be seen directly outside the tiny five-by-three-inch windows, only the seemingly infinite blue of the upper stratosphere, which teases the eyes into dizziness.

Except for the digital display on the bulkheads, there is no sensation of speed after Concorde reaches Mach 2.

On the four-man flight deck, the captain has elevated Concorde's hinged needle nose, streamlining the aircraft. He drops the speed to Mach 1.95 when the temperature at the tip approaches 300 degrees.

Lunch is over. The stewards and stewardesses pour coffee and liqueurs, then pass out individually tubed Jamaican cigars and cigarettes from a leather-covered box.

As the Concorde descends for landing the aircraft loses its supersonic grace and again seems stiff and bumpy at the lessened speed. Heat from the plane's outer skin makes the cabin stuffy.

Health Cost Stable - MD Head

TORONTO (CP) — The president of the Canadian Medical Association says health costs are not escalating in Canada.

Dr. Robert Gourdreau of Laval University, Quebec, said Canada spent about 7.2 per cent of the gross national product on health care in 1971-72, the first year of medical care insurance throughout the country, and the percentage has not increased since then.

Goudreau told the 98th annual meeting of the Ontario Medical Association, that although the medical profession advocates direct payment of part of a doctor's bill at the time of treatment, the political realities make it impossible for any government to institute this system.

"The electorate will not allow it. Tax-supported, universal health care with comprehensive, first-dollar coverage is here to stay.

"We have gone too far down the road and have too great an investment in time and resources, not to mention political futures, to scrap it for some new, radical financing system or to return to the old one."

A Highway of Death

BONN (AP) — A powerful lobby of speedy drivers and prestige car makers makes the West German autobahn anybody's racetrack, with the prize going to the most belligerent.

The superhighway Nazi dictator Adolf Hitler fostered to rush his Wehrmacht from one Second World War attack to another is the biggest modern road network in the world without a speed limit.

Small cars are forced to keep to the right as powerful sedans and sports cars barrel along in the left lane at 125 miles an hour or faster, furiously flashing headlights at anyone who dares get in their way.

About 1,000 persons are killed each year on the 4,100 miles of heavily travelled West German autobahns. On the 36,200 miles of U.S. interstates there were 3,100 deaths in 1976.

The sharp drop in death rates on interstates in the United States after introduction of the 55-m.p.h. limit made little impression in West Germany.

The Bonn government proposed a token limit of 81 m.p.h. n 1974, then backed down and commissioned a 25-month study to determine whether an autobahn speed limit would save lives and gasoline.

The study, completed last fall, had predictable findings: The death rate dropped 18 per cent where the limit was tested, and mileage improved damatically for the cars that had to slow down.

Government officials themselves are conspicuous speedsters. Chauffeur-driven convoys of politicians race between campign stops at 136 m.p.h. with only a car length between vehicles.

Speed lobbyists argue that regardless of how high the autobahn death rate is, superhighways without speed limits still are far safer than two-lane highways with a 62-m.p.h. maximum.

"We found arguments for and against introduction of a speed limit," said Prof. Karl Heinz Lenz, who headed a panel of six scientists making the study.

Arguments for the measure concern safety, he said. Those against were mainly influenced by economic considerations such as auto-industry profits and jobs.

The West German auto industey has predicted that up to 70,000 jobs might be lost if a speed limit were introduced, but the government study said automoile sales would drop only one-half of one per cent.

Another industry argument is that technical evolution would come to a halt.

"High-speed autobahns force our manufacturers to invest a ittle more in safety than those in countries where 60 or 65 m.p.h. is the limit," said Richard Wuestenberg, an engineer with West Germany's quasi-official road safety agency TUFV.

But safety appears of marginal concern to West Germans. New cars still are sold with flimsy bumpers and without headrests or rear seatbelts.

Businessman Jailed for Fraud

VANCOUVER (CP) — Businessman Alvin Zipursky was sentenced to a total of 15 months in jail Monday after pleading guilty to 12 counts of fraud in connection with two mortgage companies of which he was a director.

Provincial court Judge John McIntyre also fined UNAS Savings and Investment Plan Ltd. $44,000 and Title Holding Ltd. $1,000.

Judge McIntyre described Zipursky as a good candidate for rehabilitation, but said he had been involved in "a good deal of dishonesty in a cold-blooded way."

Zipursky pleaded guilty to obtaining money on non-existent mortgages and on mortgages sold to other investors.

Car Repair Ripoff Claims Being Routed through Courts

Canadian Press

Provincial governments and consumer groups are turning to the courts as a remedy to mounting complaints about incompetent and dishonest car repairs.

The average car owner will spend about $300 to $400 a year over the 10-year lifetime of a vehicle on routine maintenance and parts replacement to keep it running smoothly.

But some critics have estimated that as much as 40 cents of every dollar spent on car repairs may be the result of incompetency or dishonesty at auto repair outlets.

The Montreal-based Automobile Protection Association (APA), a consumer group whose battles have included the fight against rusty cars, says it receives about 20,000 complaints a year about car repairs.

APA president Phil Edmonston says the organization helps about 200 owners a year to take their cases to small claims courts where the success rate is running about 80 per cent.

"It's something of a jungle out there, the whole auto repair business," said David Mitchell, director of investigation and enforcement for the Ontario ministry of consumer and commercial relations.

"The potential for rip-offs is tremendous."

Last week, Mitchell's department laid 33 charges against five transmission firms. The complaints were that repairs were made unnecessarily.

"If an industry is unable or unwilling to clean up a problem themselves, we have to advise consumers what's there," Mitchell said.

In British Columbia, the consumer affairs department has begun regular undercover monitoring of the car repair industry because of widespread dishonesty and incompetency revealed in recent spot checks.

Michael Hanson, director of enforcement, said 13 transmission and 33 brake repair firms were tested and more than a quarter of the repairs were dishonest or incompetent.

"We are disturbed about the apparent ease with which the consumer can be cheated," Hanson said. "Consumers are usually unable to determine what repairs are necessary to get a vehicle to run properly."

These are some of the schemes used to coax an extra few dollars from unsuspecting owners:

—When a muffler repair shop has a car on the hoist to change the muffler, the owner is told the car's shocks need replacing. But mechanics say the only way to test if shocks are needed is to put the car on the ground, push down over the wheels and then watch how fast it springs back.

—A transmission shop offers a deal on a transmission adjustment at say, $19.95. The job is to include adjustment of the transmission bands and installing new fluid but when the owner returns he is told major, costly repairs are needed.

—A shop offers a special on a "spring tune-up." ut the owner ends up being charged for a number of expensive, extra parts which he is told were needed to get the car running properly.

—A shop specializing in front-end alignments may offer alignments and wheel balancing at a fixed price. But the owner is told a number of extra parts are needed with ball joints being the most commonly replaced parts.

Edmonston says that incompetency is as much a problem as outright dishonesty.

"In most cases, it's easier and faster for a mechanic to bolt on new parts than to fix the problem," he said. "A good mechanic can repair and adjust a carburetor to make it work right but a bad mechanic installs a new one.

"And there's an incentive for parts replacements because the profit is higher in parts than in labor."

Edmonston thinks provincial monitoring boards should be established to deal with complaints about car repairs. They should include representatives from the industry, government and consumers and dishonest shops should be put out of business.

"I don't think you're going to find a solution," said David Prowse, executive director of the Automotive Trade Association, which represents about 1,000 garages and service stations, mostly in Ontario. "Policing dishonesty is difficult at any time."

He thinks the extent of the problem may be exaggerated but admits that a few aggressive garages may give the industry a bad name.

"The problem is that some companies offer extraordinarily low prices to do a job on the premise that most vehicles will need a good deal more work," he said.

Prowse blames the auto manufacturers for not providing mechanics with enough information about new technoology to allow them to do repair jobs competently. He says the manufacturers should offer regular refresher courses.

"The best thing is to find a mechanic, test him for honesty and stick with him," he said.

The Canadian Automobile Association (CAA), with about 1.5 million members, has begun surveying repair outlets and issuing approvals to those it believes meet its standards.

The CAA says the program will help members "tell the good guys from the bad guys" and says an approval will mean "you can trust these people." Garages are classified by the complexity of repairs they can perform.

Although the service is aimed specifically at members, the CAA says the program, now in effect in the West and in parts of Ontario, will "undoubtedly become the recognized guide for all motorists."

The state of California has tried another approach. In 1972, it established the Bureau of Automotive Repair, which now handles about 27,000 written complaints a year about car repairs.

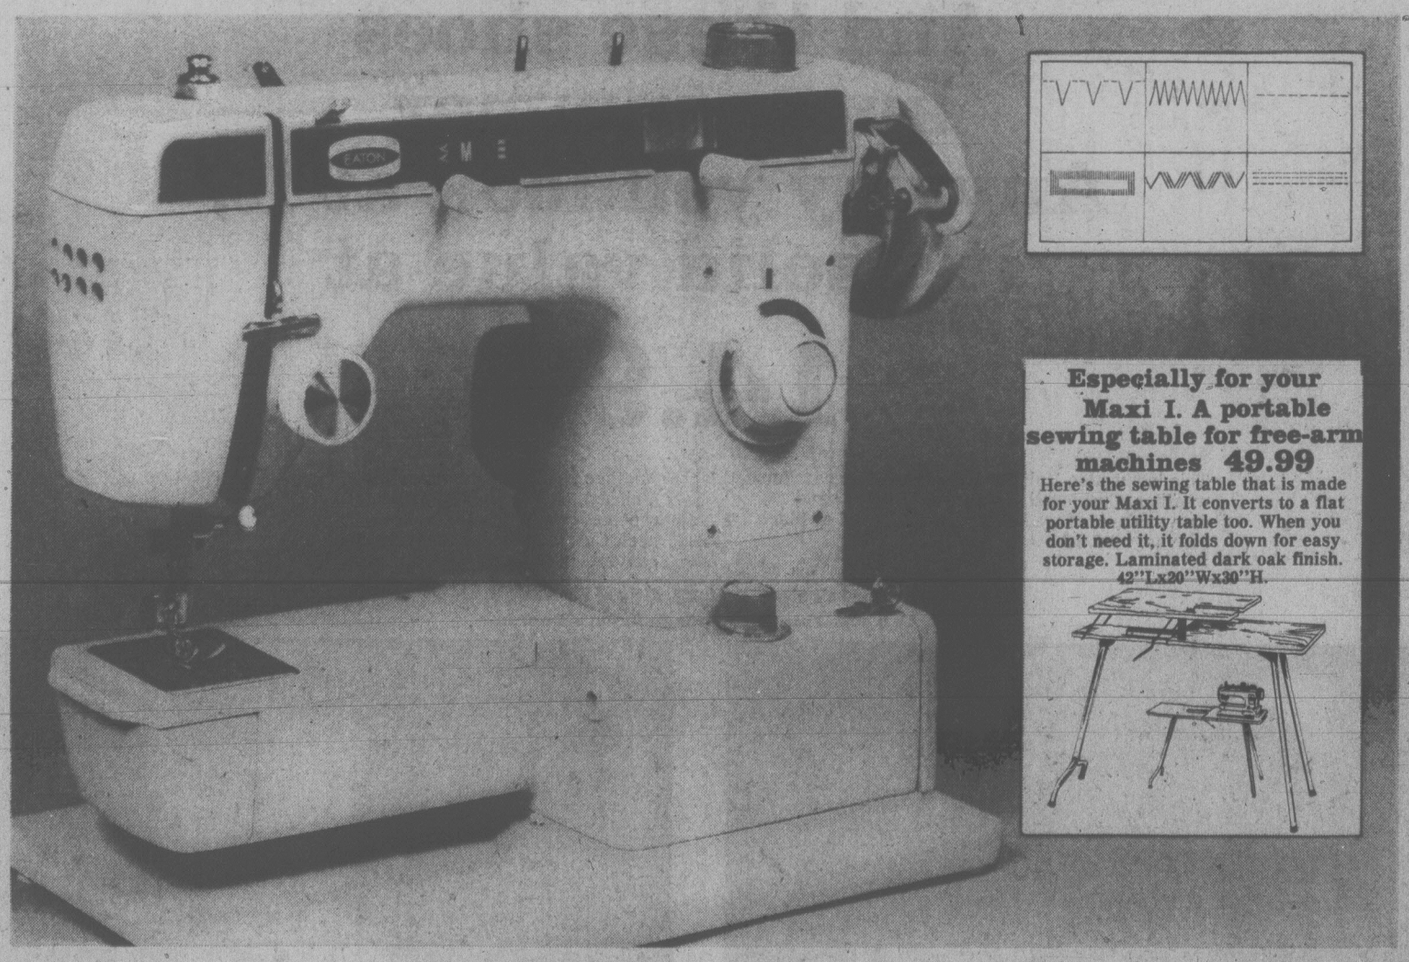

The bureau mediates complaints, conducts elaborate undercover checks of service stations using cars on which all parts carry secret, indelible markings, and develops repair standards for the trade.

TERRORIST LAW PUSHED

Times News Services

ROME — Italy's parliament, shocked but united by a national outcry to avenge Aldo Moro's murder, was called into session today to back a tough new anti-terrorist law aimed at Moro's Red Brigades kidnappers.

Across the country, workers held "anti-terrorist vigils" through the night in factories and Roman Catholics flocked to churches around the country as shocked, bitter and saddened Italians mourned Moro's death.

But violence continued in Rome, when a terrorist "hit" squad of three men and a woman pumped five bullets into the legs of a director of Italy's vast Montedison Corp. in a Red Brigades-style "kneecapping."

No group immediately claimed responsibility for the attack, but such leg shootings are a favorite Red Brigades method of warning their enemies that they have incurred the gang's wrath.

In Turin, Red Brigades founders Renato Curcio and Alberto Frenacheschini called the murder of Moro an "act of revolutionary justice" and "the highest act of humanity" in striking against the state.

Curcio was imediately ejected from the packed and heavily guarded courtroom where he and 12 other Brigades are being tried on terrorism charges.

Moro's family, embittered because his political associates would not capitulate to save his life, meanwhile, says it wants no state funeral or memorials, only silence.

"The family locks itself up in silence and demands silence," said a terse statement from the Moro household.

"History will pass judgment on the life and death of Aldo Moro," said the statement.

Eleanora Moro, Moro's 62-year-old wife, led her three children, Maria Fida, 32, Agnese, 26, and Giovanni, 20, to the morgue of the University of Rome, leaving behind Anna, her pregnant daughter.

"Someone pulled the sheet over his body," a source present at the family's farewell reported. "Mrs. Moro knelt and prayed. She was silent and calm. Only her hands were shaking a bit."

An autopsy today, showed that Moro did not die instantly from the 11 bullets fired into his body Tuesday.

Ballistic tests were also planned to see if the 11 shots fired into the region of Moro's heart came from one or several light submachine guns.

★ Five Years Of Blood

ROME (Reuter) — The killing of former Italian premier Aldo Moro climaxed a bloody five-year campaign by the Red Brigades and demonstrated the ease with which the urban guerrillas carry out large-scale operations throughout Italy.

Their numerous shootings in the past few weeks leave no doubt about their tight organization and cold-blooded efficiency. But they had never killed a hostage, preferring instead to gain maximum publicity after their victims are released.

The kidnapping of Moro was also the first time they had attacked a leading personality of the Italian government, their prime target.

"Sentenced to death" for crimes against the working classes attributed to him and his Christian Democratic Party, Moro's days seemed numbered from the day he was kidnapped.

By shooting his five bodyguards, the Red Brigades had raised the stakes in their self-proclaimed civil war to what one top anti-terrorist policeman called "the point of no return, of no compromise."

During the last two years, since Brigades founder Renato Curcio and his chief lieutenants were arrested, the gang has shot dozens of figures from the Italian establishment, including local politicians, businessmen and journalists.

Since Moro was kidnapped, the Brigades have shown just how organized they really are, how they are able to move with ease in many areas of the country.

Nine communiques, which have traced the trial of Aldo Moro before a "people's court," the "sentence of death," the demands for the release of Curcio and others, have been issued through a network of sympathizers in Italy's major cities with obvious efficiency.

The abductors' demands for the release of 13 Italians from three guerrilla gangs showed them to be the apparent heirs of Curcio, a former hotel bell boy who founded the Brigades from workers and students in the north in 1969.

The kidnappers have extracted every last ounce of publicity from the Moro abduction, mounting a me-

Highway Kickbacks Probed

The RCMP is looking into allegations that two employees of the highways ministry working near Princeton accepted favors from heavy-equipment operators in return for calling out their equipment, Highways Minister Alex Fraser said Tuesday.

He said the operators are hired on a day-labor basis throughout the province as needed, at a rate fixed by the ministry.

The minister said he does not know how much money is involved in the accusations or how many firms are involved.

"I don't believe the amount of money involved is great but the principle is the problem," he said.

Fraser said the matter was brought to his attention in November by a group of citizens, and that it was turned over to the attorney-general's ministry following an internal investigation.

A DIVORCE FOR PRINCESS

Margaret, 47, Queen Elizabeth's younger sister who is fifth in line to the British throne, was married in 1960.

The couple has been separated since 1976.

An announcement from Kensington Palace, Margaret's official residence, said: "Her Royal Highness the Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon and the Earl of Snowdon, after two years of separation, have agreed that their marriage should formally be ended.

"Accordingly her Royal Highness will start the necessary legal proceedings."

A spokesman at the palace said the princess, who is in a London hospital suffering from gastro-enteritis, had no plans to remarry.

The princess would continue to have custody of the couple's two children— Lady Sarah Armstrong-Jones, 14, and Viscount Linley, 16, but Lord Snowdon would have access to them.

Lawyers of both Margaret and Lord Snowdon, 48, have been in close touch for some time, and the palace spokesman said legal proceedings would begin within days.

Late Night Ferry

More runs and later sailings will increase B.C. ferry traffic capacity by 20 per cent during the summer months, Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf said Tuesday.

Bawlf, the Victoria MLA responsible for the ferry corporation, said starting June 29 there will be 24 sailings from each terminal on the Swartz Bay-Tsawwassen run Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays and 22 departures on the other four days.

The Queen of Tsawwassen will also make an extra late night run, leaving Swartz Bay at 11 p.m. with a return sailing to the Island at 12.15 a.m. from June 30 through September 5.

"We've had a 20 per cent increase in ferry traffic in the first quarter of this year over last year," Bawlf said.

This increase, coupled with a surge of summer visitors expected for the Capt. Cook Bicentennial festivities, prompted the move to try the extra runs through the summer, he said.

Bawlf also said he is committed to holding fares at their current levels at least through the summer.

The entire ferry service is under study with a view to expanding the service as the corporation looks to the 1980s, he said.

Fleet requirements related to costs will determine if a change in the fare structure is needed. This should be known by the end of this year, he added.

The later sailings of the Queen of Tsawwassen will be closely monitored to see if it is an appropriate service and whether it can be extended to greater use in summers to come.

The increased number of runs means the fleet can carry 4,100 cars each way daily between Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen and 18,800 passengers.

These compare to last summer's maximums of 3,600 cars and 15,000 passengers.

BOY FOUND

Victoria's little boy lost was found today.

Three-year-old Christopher Williams — the object of an all-out search by police and volunteers since he wandered from his home Tuesday afternoon — was reunited with his parents this morning.

Victoria police said the tot had been picked up by a man and woman in the vicinity of the Johnson Street bridge about 5.30 p.m. Tuesday.

The unidentified couple, who had had taken him to their home to spend the night, were on their way today to get help in locating his parents when a security guard spotted the boy and alerted police.

His parents, Marlene and Peter Williams, tried to trace his movements then called police.

WASHINGTON (CP) — Spokesmen for U.S. West Coast fishermen told a Senate committee today they have agreed to drop a court case that would have closed U.S. waters to Canadian salmon trollers next week.

But the price for that concession, they indicated, is an understanding that American officials will not allow Canadians to expand into more salmon-trolling areas off the U.S. West Coast, as is promised in the proposed Canada-U.S. 1978 fishing agreement.

Senator Warren Magnuson (Dem. Wash.), chairman of the Senate commerce committee, said he would use his considerable influence to try to keep Canadians from gaining any additional salmon-trolling areas.

Canadians, he said, already have the best part of the bargain in reciprocal fishing rights since they allow U.S. fishermen to take groundfish off British Columbia while gaining access to more valuable salmon off the state of Washington.

Tolmie Mom Sues To Save School

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY
Times Staff

A Tolmie Elementary school parent has filed a Supreme Court writ against the Greater Victoria school board on behalf of her two children.

Helen Falta will appear in court next Wednesday asking for an injunction to stop the closure of Tolmie elementary school in June, her laywer Dave Vickers said today.

Vickers said Falta claims the board has failed to demonstrate to parents sufficient need to shut down the school and that closure will cause irreparable damage to her children's education.

The school board made its decision after a series of public hearings at each school selected for possible closure.

Board chairman Susan Brice said today the board will proceed with plans for closure of Tolmie.

"I haven't any idea what kind of impact this will have, but the board has made its decision," Brice said.

"It's a local school board responsibility."

But Vickers said the Public Schools Act states the education ministry must approve any school closure.

Ministry approval can come only after affected parents have been fully advised of the need for closure, Vickers said.

And he said Falta has signed an affidavit swearing this step was not taken.

Vickers said Education Minister Pat McGeer is mistaken when he says closure decisions are strictly up to school boards.

McGeer has refused to get involved and will not meet with Falta and other parents who want to appeal school closure decisions.

In a letter to Falta, McGeer said only the sale of board property requires ministry approval.

"For purposes of local autonomy, I would be reluctant as minister of education to interfere with such decisons which are clearly of local responsibility," the letter said.

Vickers said Falta will continue her lawsuit whether or not she receives the injunction.

MOSCOW (Reuter) — Likina Shevchenko, wife of a top Russian official at the United Nations who defected to the United States last month, committed suicide on Monday, her son said today.

Private Hospitals Checked

Teams of nurses will visit private-care facilities participating in the government long-term health care program to ensure patients aren't being over-charged for services.

Health Minister Bob McClelland said the teams are being formed in response to complaints the government has received alleging unfair charges are being levied against patients by a few private operators.

He added it is essential that such practices if they exist, be brought to a halt.

Private facilities are providing about 15,500 beds for the government's new program and are under strict guidelines on what services they must provide for the daily $6.50 fee.

Six nurses are being hired by the ministry of health and will be given special training by the ministry of consumer and corporate affairs to form the teams which will be in operation by mid-May.

Operators must provide laundry, meals, recreation, entertainment and social activities for elderly patients in their care for the daily $6.50 fee.

Iceberg Plague Facing Alaska Tankers

By BILL RICHARDS
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — As early as this summer, a giant Alaskan glacier may begin tossing thousands of icebergs of all sizes into the path of the 200,000-ton supertankers hauling oil south from the trans-Alaska pipeline, according to a government study team.

A second group of federal scientists, who have been pondering the nightmare prospect for the U.S. Coast Guard which has jurisdiction over the Alaskan oil shipping lanes, said Tuesday they have come up with these potential solutions to the problem:

—Hang a 2 1-2 mile, $32 million nylon rope across the mouth of the channel near the glacier to corral the passing icebergs and hold them there until they melt.

—Lasso the wayward icebergs, hook them up to a flotilla of tugboats, and tow them off out of the way.

—Shut down the oil tanker traffic, and the pipeline, until the icebergs go away.

Coast guard Capt. Ronald Kollmeyer, who headed the team which prepared the proposed solutions, said that his suggestions, which are now being circulated in draft form among government and scientific circles, drew some laughter at first.

"Some people said go away and don't bug us with off-the-wall ideas like that," said Kollmeyer, who is chief of the ocean science section at the U.S. Coast Guard Academy in New London, Conn.

Kollmeyer's team also suggested as another alternative that a powerful radar station be built along Valdez Arm, the waterway used by the supertankers on their way to the pipeline terminal to spot the icebergs. The Arm is nine miles from the 42-mile-long Columbia glacier which scientists said is showing increasing signs of "calving" icebergs into the shipping lanes.

Once the icebergs are spotted, Kollmeyer said, there is still the problem of how to avoid them.

Last August, the coast guard shut down the Valdez Arm shipping lanes to night tanker traffic for several short periods after the appearance of numbers of icebergs. The U.S. Geological Survey has been studying the glacier with a 14-member scientific team under a two-year $1.3 million project.

The interior department, which oversees USGS, said the team's first-year studies showed that the glacier was increasing its production of icebergs. Some of the icebergs already are floating down Columbia Bay from the glacier and into shipping lanes used by oil tankers.

Officials of ARCO, the largest shipper of Alaskan oil from Valdez, said that about 50 tankers use the port each month. Charles Lynch, an ARCO vice president, said all ships using the port are equipped with collision-avoidance equipment and said he was confident they could avoid icebergs in the sea lane.

Eric Gives Himself Tough Act to Follow

Surely nothing could be more unlikely than a pudgy musical comedy singer who likes to cook — and to eat — running the famed Boston Marathon.

But Eric Roberts, a printer at Victoria Press and an entertainer known for his nightclub act and his roles in such shows as South Pacific, Guys and Dolls and Oklahoma, did it. And at the age of 41.

How he did it — completing the gruelling test of 26 miles, 385 yards after taking up running less than a year ago — is incredible. Why he did it is even more baffling. I don't think even he knows.

But he does know that, even for a recent convert to running, the Boston is the ultimate.

"It's the World Series of marathons," Eric says with reverence. "It's where everyone who can afford it goes. Just to run in the Boston . . . is like going to Mecca."

Gone now is the excrutiating pain, the memory of not being able to walk for two days afterwards and of struggling, legs sweating profusely, through every trip down a few stairs. It was, says Eric, all worth it. And now he has something to cherish. Something he'll be able to tell his grandchildren.

And yet, when Eric Roberts took up running late last May nothing was further from his mind than the dream of running a marathon.

He found he was too much involved with people who wanted to drink, dance and smoke. So he joined the Y.

At 40, he weighed in at 157 pounds and admits that at only 5 feet 6½ inches, he looked a little roly poly. (Eric has trimmed that to 145 pounds but would like to get down to around 130. His love of food is the problem.)

"The first time I went for a two-mile run I ran a mile, had to walk the last mile and couldn't walk for two days afterwards, I was so stiff," he says with a grin.

"But I stuck with it. I decided life begins at 40 and I wanted to do something that wasn't a gift. My nightclub work is a gift and I needed to find something else I could do. I had played a little fun soccer but had never been the athletic type."

Within a month, Eric was running with the leaders and was often out with friends who ran five or six miles at a time.

He got a lot of advice and help from marathoner Bruce (Gunner) Shaw, who also works at Victoria Press, and last November decided to go to Vancouver with some other runners competing in the annual Seawall Race.

Eric's brother Darrell, a Vancouver lawyer and a mile champ in his school days, was running in the 6-mile Seawall for his fourth time. When he saw the still-pudgy Eric in the lineup he couldn't believe it.

"Eric, running?" said Darrell. "He never ran anywhere before."

"But I did run and in that race I placed 450th out of 1,450 runners and I was pleased," Eric says.

Still, there was no idea of a marathon in his mind.

"Then on the Thursday before Christmas I was out with the Y group and they were dragging their heels a bit," he explains. "So I took off by myself for a five-mile run.

"I felt good, though, so I kept going and I ended up doing 16 miles. I thought boy, if I can do that and work on it, one day I can run a marathon."

Eric decided to combine a visit to a friend in Boston with a run in the race but his letter of application for one of the registered 4,700 starting berths was rejected.

"But they kept my $3 entry fee and I said damn it, you've kept my money, I'm going to run."

And run he did.

On Monday, April 17, there was Eric, somewhere near the back with the 2,000 or so unofficial runners, who were the last to get away.

"There were so many people that the leaders were a mile or more on their journey before we got to where they had started from," he says.

Boasting the Victoria Y crest and sporting his own home-made number R2 D2 on his chest, Eric attracted a lot of attention from the million or more fans who lined the route. It was those fans, in fact, who kept him from quitting when he started to feel the pain.

"The most I'd ever run in practice was 18 miles and even then I was sick from running too hard and from not eating the right food," he explains. "I tell you if you want to run a marathon, you've got to be able to stand pain. I never knew what pain was until then. The last five miles of the Boston brought the most excrutiating pain I've ever known. From the waist down everything is crying 'Stop! Stop!'

"And yet the people along the way were so warm and responsive they wouldn't let you quit. They'd say 'R2 D2, Way to Go!'

"When you struggle to the 21-mile mark, a policeman with a bullhorn says 'Congratulations, you've just reached the top of Heartbreak Hill. It's all downhill from here.'

"But you run into a wall in those last five miles. Your conditioning has all gone and you're running on guts alone.

"Still, the people won't let you stop. They do anything to keep you going. For the last two miles they call out 'One mile to go!' and when there are six blocks left they scream 'Only three blocks to go!'

"The fans look for the guy who's going to win but after that they seem to prefer to cheer on the inexperienced runner, the guy who is maybe doing something for the first time."

With the finish line at last in sight, horror struck Eric Roberts. He was having difficulty running.

"I was going to finish, I knew, but I kept saying quietly 'Please Lord, don't let it be the worst of all things — walking across the line.'

Then, with a burst of strength, he completed the course in the unofficial time of three hours, 35 minutes and 16 seconds.

Eric lay exhausted on the ground. His feet were high in the air, still going round. After 26 miles he couldn't stop them. It may seem crazy but he knew then he'd have to do it again (he plans to run in the Seattle Marathon this November) to prove it wasn't all a dream.

The ecstasy of it didn't hit him until the next day when he felt a great surge of pride and relived that thrilling moment when he ran across the finish line.

Naval Officer Charged

A 29-year-old officer from CFB Esquimalt, the brother of two men who have admitted the armed holdup of HMCS Terra Nova, is facing a court martial as a result of an investigation into financial matters aboard HMCS Mackenzie.

Facing charges is Capt. William J.E. Fredericks, 979 Thomas.

The nature of the charges won't be known until the court martial begins May 17.

Fredericks' two brothers, Lloyd, 48, and Frank, 45, have been remanded in custody until May 16 for pre-sentence reports and sentencing.

They pleaded guilty April 27 in Victoria county court to confining Lieut. Peter McIntyre and his wife Candice; to using a firearm while committing a $19,000 robbery; and to stealing money from McIntyre while armed with an offensive weapon.

The court was told the two brothers, who were partly disguised and carried a pistol and a sawed-off shotgun, forced their way into the McIntyre's home at 719 Connaught on the night of Jan. 14.

They bound and gagged Mrs. McIntrye leaving her with Frank while Lloyd took her husband, Terra Nova's logistics officer in charge of payroll, to the ship where McIntrye was forced to open the safe and fill a briefcase with money.

The abductor and his victim then returned to the McIntrye home where McIntyre was also bound and gagged before the two men left.

Lettuce Cost Shows Drop

Prices for head lettuce were lopped 40-70 cents this week compared with early May as better conditions in California fields permit harvesting.

Typical retail price today was 79 cents a head vs. $1.19-$1.49 last week.

Part of the reason for falling prices is buyer resistance encountered in the eastern market for California lettuce whose scarcity was blamed on flooding at planting time in November and heavy rains during the growing season since then.

Large heads were wholesaling around 59 cents and small ones about 39 cents.

Produce spokesmen hoped the weather had stabilized in California, but there was no assurance that supplies would remain adequate. Local head lettuce will not come on market until about the second week of June as crops mature in the Fraser Valley.

A Victoria supermarket 10 days ago posted lettuce at the unheard of price of $1.65, but got few takers.

Restaurants and hotels were about the only regular customers, forced to continue offering salad with meals and green garnish on hamburgers.

Final Warning Going Out To Businesses

One final warning notice will be sent to 112 firms owing Saanich $35,283 in unpaid 1978 business tax, which became due April 30.

If the bills aren't settled by the deadline set by the municipal solicitor, legal action should be started against the businesses involved, the finance committee agreed Tuesday night.

The Saanich rate for business tax is five per cent of the gross rental value of the premises. Accounts unpaid by May 1 each year have a five per cent penalty added.

'SHOULD HAVE DRESSED AS NUN'

All That Cleavage Stuns Mayor

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier voted against funding the Victoria Rape Relief Centre Tuesday saying he was disturbed by what he felt was a low-cut blouse worn by a centre representative.

After the meeting Couvelier told reporters: "Did you see her blouse for God's sake! The thing was down to here," he said gesturing to his midriff.

"Maybe I'm just old fashioned," he added. "Nobody else seemed to notice it. Maybe I'm just a dirty old man."

Couvelier voted against the awarding of any funds to the group because he was disturbed by the idea of "some woman in a low-slung blouse" giving a lecture to male high school students on the topic of rape.

He said he had to question the operation because of the neck-line of a belted jacket worn by Rape Relief representative Trisha MaryMoon.

And she added that the over-all postion taken by local government to the centre's requests for grants is also intolerable.

"They're giving us such ridiculous reasons for turning us down . . . it seems totally incredible to me that that kind of thing (Couvelier's statements) could have been said at a committee meeting in the first place, but then for him to repeat it to reporters later is ridiculous," said MaryMoon.

MaryMoon appeared before the committee in an unsuccesful bid to reverse an earlier decision by the intermunicipal grants committee not to fund the centre to the tune of $16,000.

During debate of the application, and after MaryMoon had left the committee room, Couvelier said he wasn't sure that the centre was operating in an acceptable manner.

Couvelier was upset at the fact that Rape Relief Centre staff spend some of their time in Greater Victoria schools lecturing both male and female students on the dangers of rape.

"I'm not even sure they're going about this the right way . . . talking to boys about it," said Couvelier.

"I'm not sure I'd want somebody wearing a low-slung blouse standing up in front of a bunch of grade 12 . . . it's contradictory."

When asked if he objects to a woman talking to boys on the subject of rape, he made it clear he'd been upset by MaryMoon's style of dress.

MaryMoon said that she couldn't believe Couvelier's complaint about her style of dress.

"He seems to have a lot of fantasies," she said. "I just don't know where he's coming from."

She said Couvelier seemed to think that no woman who doesn't look like a nun has the right to talk about women and rape and that any woman that isn't covered from head-to-foot is suspect.

MaryMoon said if she'd known what Couvelier was like she'd have dressed in a nun's habit and would have said prayers before addressing the committee.

"Maybe then they'd have listened to me."

The committee turned down the request for funding, adopting a motion by Couvelier that no action be taken on the grant application.

Jaycees Promise Surprises At Fair Opening on Friday

"The Jaycee Fair is going to be different this year — and hopefully better," exhibition director Dave Trace said today.

"We were determined to change everything."

For one thing, the fair, which starts at 4 p.m. Friday, will run nine days instead of six and will draw 100,000 people, Trace said, up from last year's total of 64,000.

"They are a Canadian company and all their rides are new. They are putting the rides up today. They have more rides than we have space for so we are not certain of all the things we can offer but for sure there will be the Skydiver, which will be the feature of the fair."

The Skydiver is a bucket ride carrying passengers 80 feet in the air, or about 40 feet higher than a large Ferris Wheel. From the top, anyone brave enough to go up will be able to look down about 30 or 40 feet to the roof of the Memorial Arena.

"The Skydiver will be visible from the Town and Country shopping centre, possibly from as far away as Royal Oak."

Adding to its height will be the fact it will be atop Crocus Hill, the area behind the arena known as the rock.

"We decided to call it Crocus Hill because there isn't a single crocus on it," Trace said, "and, anyway, it should be called something besides the rock."

Also on the hill, if space permits, will be a children's train ride. The children's midway will be centred on the hill.

This means the agricultural display, which used to be atop the rock, will go behind the curling rink where the kiddie midway was.

The stage show debuts at 8 p.m. Friday after opening ceremonies. Headliner Friday, Saturday and Sunday is Anson Williams, Potsy from the Happy Days TV show. He is a singer and dancer. Show times Saturday and Sunday are 4 p.m. and 8 p.m.

Headliner Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday is Danny and the Juniors, a 1950s nostalgia group famous for Let's Go to the Hop. They are backed by a hula hoop act and other things related to the 1950s. Show times are 8 p.m. only.

Final headliner is the Spurrlows, a Las Vegas show band of about 15 members.

Show times next week are 8 p.m. both Thursday and Friday and 4 p.m. and 8 p.m. on Saturday, May 20, the last day.

Trace said the $2 admission fee for adults goes almost entirely to pay for the entertainment. Cost for students is $1 and children six to 13 is 75 cents. Under six and pensioners are free at all times.

There will be two shows daily of Peter Ralston and the puppets.

Monday from 12:30 p.m. to 2 p.m. will be handicapped children's day and will be closed to the public. The youngsters will get free rides and free hot dogs and pop, courtesy of the Jaycees.

TINY SEEDLING will become a mighty fir tree someday, 10 year-old Scott Roger, a junior forest ranger from the Colwood-Langford station, explains to Lisa Codd, 6, of Salt Spring Island. Lisa doesn't seem too impressed but she might have been a bit camera-shy. This is National Forest Week and there is a display at Hillside Mall.
